YOUNG PLAYWRIGHT DIES

Hansberry rites Saturday

NEW YORK—The great and the near-great of the theatre, drama and entertainment world will pay tribute to Lorraine Hansberry, 34 - year - old playwright Saturday.

Funeral services for Miss Hansberry will be held Saturday at 11 a.m. at the Presbyterian Church of the Master, 86 Morningside Ave. at 122nd St.

Miss Hansberry was best known for her play "A Raisin in the Sun" which was later filmed. Its Broadway run in 1959 won her the New York Critics' Circle Award for "Best Play of the Year," making her the youngest native American dramatist to win this distinction. The filmed version won the Cannes Film Festival's Special Award in 1961.

LORRAINE HANSBERRY

She is currently represented on Broadway by "The Sign in Sidney Brustein's Window" which opened Oct. 15 to mixed reviews and has been kept alive by interested theatrical friends of Miss Hansberry.

* * *

THE PLAYWRIGHT under went treatment for cancer during rehearsals for the play and was released from the hospital for the opening. She reentered the hospital Oct. 17 and did not leave again.

In private life Miss Hansberry was the wife of theatrical producer Robert Nemiroff. She was born in Chicago, attended the University of Wisconsin and came to New York in 1950. She worked as a tag marker in the fur industry while gaining experience as a writer.

MISS HANSBERRY had completed another work, "Les Blancs," which is tentatively scheduled for production later this season.

Tuesday night's performance of "The Sign in Sidney Brustein's Window" was cancelled out of respect for the playwright.

Funeral arrangements were not immediately completed.

FROM DAN DAY'S DIARY

Battling captain had advice for impatient folk at home

By DAN DAY

MY THO, S. Viet Nam (NNPA) — Riding in an armed helicopter, I found Capt. Cole Whaley Jr., of Cleveland, out chasing the Viet Cong guerrillas, knee deep in a rice paddy not far from his command post in My Tho, 35 miles south of Saigon.

This was nothing new for the 29 - year - old Whaley — he had been hot on the trail of the rebel Viet Cong (VC) since his arrival in South Viet Nam 13 months ago.

We had contacted his unit on the radio and circled overhead until we saw the green smoke signal that he had set off at the edge of a rice paddy. Capt. John King, of Tampa, Fla., my escort for the trip, pointed out a long, thin line of marching men in the distance.

* * *

OUR PILOT settled the chopper down neatly on a two foot - wide path enclosing another rice paddy. We got out and went over to the column of marching men and waited until Capt. Whaley came up, automatic rifle at the ready, with a .45 caliber pistol in the holster at his waist.

He stopped, but his Vietnamese troops continued to move out in the direction of a suspected nest of Viet Cong guerrillas. (Later, I learned that this particular three - hour operation had netted 11 rebel suspects out of a catch of 28 men.)

I asked him how things were going. "Fine, sir," the said, and grinned broadly. I took his hand and said I would like to compare notes with him when he had the time. He suggested that we meet at lunch at his command post known as "The Seminary," the former site of a Catholic school.

AS ADVISOR to Vietnamese Capt. Hein, commander of a company of the 7th Reconnaissance Battalion of the Army of the Republic of Viet Nam (ARVN), the Ohioan had just completed a three - day mission at Ba Dua in a region 15 miles west of My Tho.

Results of that operation: 15 VCs killed by headcount and 50 bodies removed from the scene of action by their comrades. The ARVN troops left 12 dead on the battle field and recovered 19 of their wounded.

He said the government troops had taken a severe punishment, too, but in all of the dozens of encounters with the Viet Cong over the past year, they had bested the VC. During November, 195 ARVN casualties.

* * *

PLUSHING OUT the Viet Cong is no easy task, as they often conceal their black uniforms under civilian dress and are expertly trained in camouflage techniques. They usually move under cover of darkness.

It is difficult to get information about the VC from the local people because of VC threats and intimidation. They routinely kill informers by slitting their throats and chopping off their heads.

Capt. Whaley is optimistic that the VC can't take such a beating indefinitely. He likes his job and feels that he is contributing to the struggles being waged by the Vietnamese government to end the civil strife.

Ordinarily, he would have been reassigned to the States last month, but he decided to extend his duty here for another year.

* * *

"WE'VE GOT a stake in this thing," Whaley said confidently, "and I am thoroughly convinced that it is just a matter of time before the VC will decide to call it quits."

I told him that many people back home were worried about the slow progress being made in clearing out the Communist - supported VC's, and about the increasing number of Americans who are being killed.

Whaley looked off into the distance and said, "This is a war, sir, one by any other name, and in a war somebody is going to get hurt. It is difficult keeping a scheduled when a resourceful enemy has you lined up in his gunsight."

* * *

* * *

CAPT. WHALEY'S parents, Mr. and Mrs. Cole Whaley, live at 4637 E. 173rd St., in Cleveland. He has sister brothers and five sisters.

A bachelor, he won his Army commission at West Virginia State College at Institute in 1957. When assigned to Viet Nam, he had just completed the advanced officer course at Fort Bliss, Texas. He was ordered to Fort Bliss from Korea.

My purpose in going to My Tho was to meet Capt. Whaley, about whom I had heard so much in Saigon. After spending several hours with him, which included a visit to the Vietnamese compound commanded by Capt. Hein, I returned to Saigon in the same helicopter that brought me down.

* * *

BACK IN Saigon after a 30-minute flight, marred only by an occasional burst from a VC weapon on the ground, I attended the daily news briefings given by Barry Zorthian, director of the U.S. Information Service in South Viet Nam.

Then I took off for my hotel, the Caravelle to pack for my trip to Singapore at the southernmost tip of Malaysia.

ODDITIES IN THE NEWS

STROLL IN THE HEAT

LONDON (UPI) — It was the hottest day of the year in London on Jan. 6, so a young man took off his clothes and strolled naked down an East End shopping street with a loaf of bread under his arm.

Traffic halted and passers-by hooted until police took the stroller to a hospital for a mental examination.

The temperature — 42 degrees — made it the hottest of 1965's six days.

57 WELL FED

(UPI) — John Hanson, inspector for the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, said this week two elderly spinsters, Miss Ellen Ware, 83, and Miss Gwenda Morgan, 70, nearly starved themselves to death but kept 40 cocker spaniels, 6 terriers, a St. Bernard, 7 goats, a pig, 4 geese and both women unconscious but reported they were responding to treatment.

'Irrational' attacks hurt legal profession

JACKSON, Miss (UPI) — Mississippi State Bar said this week "irrational" attacks on the U.S. Supreme Court were hurting the image of the entire legal profession.

We're all suffering because of the backlash of emotionally intemperate criticism of the Supreme Court," said Earl T. Thomas, a Jackson attorney.

Why did they murder Frank Morris? La. town is silent

FERRIDAY, La. (NPI) — Frank Morris was colored. Frank Morris is dead. He died in his home. He repaired the shoes of everyone in this Louisiana town.

Frank Morris died just before he died—of burns which covered 90 percent of his body—he told [illegible] some time.

It all began around [illegible] last [illegible], when a fire and explosion ripped through Frank's Shoe Shop. A few minutes later, Morris stumbled into a service station a block away, his clothing afire.

An attendant put out the flames, and Morris was taken to a hospital, where he lived for four days. Before he died he reportedly told his story to the FBI, which made a tape recording.

MORRIS LIVED in a small building attached to the rear of his shop. Awakened by noise, he saw two white men pouring gasoline around the shop.

Morris said he tried to run, but one of the men forced him back inside at shotgun point. Then came the fire and explosion.

Local authorities refuse to say that foul play was involved; in fact, Mayor L. W. Davis said: "Don't call it arson. That has not been determined."

WHY WAS FRANK Morris murdered?

No one in this town of 4,500 just across the Mississippi River from Natchez seems to know. Morris had never been known to take part in civil rights activities.

The town has a large colored population, but it is mostly silent. There have been no civil rights [illegible] meets in the area, but a number of whites have armed themselves.

Natchez and Ferriday both have active Ku Klux Klans, which have distributed literature throughout the county. Crosses have been burned, a colored business establishment was destroyed by a mysterious fire, a white [illegible] was the target of a bomb.

JOSEPH EDWARDS, a 24-year-old colored motel employee, is vanished in July and is still missing. His abandoned auto was found in Ferriday.

People, white and colored, liked Morris. The assistant district attorney, Roy S. Malcomb, said: "My 10-year-old daughter prayed for that Negro every night."

But Frank Morris is dead, and there seems every likelihood that his death will come no nearer solution than any of the at[illegible] racial crimes which are plaguing the Deep South.

UNITED NATIONS REPORT

Bitter UN debate produces hands-off Congo resolution

By CHARLES P. HOWARD
UN Correspondent

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. —The Security Council of the United Nations last wek, after 18 sometimes bitter sessions lasting nearly three weeks, adopted 104 with France abstaining, a resolution in which the Council:

— Requested all states to refrain or desist from interfering in the domestic affairs of the emocra- Republic of the Congo;

CHAS. P. HOWARD

— Appealed for a cease fire in the Congo in accordance with a resolution adopted by the Organization of African Unity (OAU) on 10 September, 1964 and considered that the mercenaries should be withdrawn from the Congo "as a matter of urgency";

— Encouraged the OAU to pursue its efforts to help the government of the Congo to achieve national reconciliation, and — Requested all states to assist the OAU in the attainment of these objectives.

THE SECRETARY - GENERAL of the United Nations was asked to follow the situation in the Congo and to report to the Security Council at the appropriate time.

The request of the 22 nations, 18 of which were African countries, for a condemnation of the United States, Belgium and Britain for their military intevention in the Congo because of U.S. paratroop drop on Stanleyville Sept. 24, 1964, was denied as well as the request of Prime Minister Tshombe that certain African States and others condemned for their alleged support of the nationalist movement in the Congo.

The resolution, however, pointed out that it "deplored the recent events in the Democratic Republic of the Congo."

UNTIL THE LAST, the 18 African countries, Algeria Burundi Central African Republic, Congo (Brazzaville), Dahomey, Ethiopia, Ghana, Guinea, Kenya, Malawi, Mali, Mauritania, Somalia, Sudan, Tanzania, Uganda, United Arab Republic, and Zambia, signers of the complaint, insisted upon the resolution containing a condemnation of the United States and Belgium.

For a time it seemed a deadlock would be reached and no resolution would come out of the long session. This prospect was deplored deeply by the Ivory Coast and African colleagues, members on the Security Council.

Ambassador Achkar Marof, designated by the 18 African States as their spokesman, insisted upon and obtained a change in the wording of paragraph six of the operative part of the resolution.

Paragraph six as originally drawn "requested the Secretary General of the United Nations to watch over the implementation of the presents resolution: to follow the situation in the Congo, and to report to the Security Council at the appropriate time.

AMBASSADOR MAROF contended successfully that this wording tended to limit the authority of the OAU and to be an infringement on its powers in the matter; and further, it tended to indicate a lack of confidence in the OAU. By agreement the wording was changed to "follow the situation in the Congo and to report to the Security Council at the appropriate time.

Although certain gains were made by filing the complaint and the subsequent long Security Council session, each side will continue to interpret the resolution as it wants to, and when that is done little will appear to have been accomplished.

The United States, seeing the demand for "condemnation of the acts of herself and Belgium on September 24, turned down, now feels that her acts were approved and will proceed as before. That is, she will contend that she is assisting the "legal government of the Congo and that it is the right of the "legal government of the Congo to ask for help."

Thus, the paragraph of the resolution "Requests all states to refrain from intervening in the domestic affairs of the Congo, does not apply to her, and she will continue to seend planes, gun personnel and other war equipment to Tshombe.

CERTAINLY AMBASSADOR Stevenson's speech and his statement in explanation of his vote says as much. I asked him if the United States would make any changes in her conduct in the Congo and he answered that "he did not know what Mr. Tshombe would do next. To me this clearly says that if Tshombe needs more guns, ammunition, plans and mercenaries, (which he surely will), the United States will furnish them.

As to the other side, if the United States continues to back Tshombe, they are going to back the "Nationalists. In that case the United States is for a long war, that Africans will interpret as a war against Africa. Congo nationalists are not going to accept Kasavubu, Tshombe, Motubu and Monogo.

They are satisfied that these Congolese are put in power by the United States, Belgium and Britain and that these four are the servants of the imperialist powers and are not serving the Congolese people.

WE MAY USE ALL the legalistic terms that we want to, the people of Africa consider this United States support of Tshombe as a threat to their "independent survival and they are not going to stand by idly any longer. They are sure that the South African lobby in the United States has taken over the control of the State Depeartment policy on Africa.

They note the announcement that President Johnson is considering acceptig the resignation of Assistant Secretary of State Harriman. They consider Mr. Harriman and Mr. Mennen Williams as the architects of the policy of the Congo, especially the acceptance of his vote says as much. I asked him if the United States would make any changes in her conduct in the Congo and he answered that "he did not know what Mr. Tshombe would do next. To me this clearly says that if Tshombe needs more guns, ammunition, plans and mercenaries, (which he surely will), the United States will furnish them.
