500 year-old girl's head starts hunt for murderer

LONDON, (UPI)—The severed head of a girl was identified Wednesday night as belonging to an Inca princess dead for at least 500 years.

A murder hunt by Scotland yard detectives was touched off Wednesday when the head was discovered in a building contractor's pile of sand.

But when Prof. Francis Camps a pathologist, examined the head, he announced: "This is not a murder. It is the head of a young girl buried hundreds of years ago."

A girl student then told police that her boyfriend, a medical student, brought the head back with him from a vacation trip to South America.

He simply decided to dump it when he cleaned out his apartment, she said.

Undercovercop upped two grades

By RAY BOONE

NEW YORK — (UPI) — The hero rookie policeman who risked his life to foil a fantastic plot to blow up the Statue of Liberty and two other national shrines went back to work as an undercover detective Wednesday with an unprecedented second promotion in two days.

A police spokesman said Raymond Wood, 31, would continue to be an undercover detective "on the tightrope" because his face was still a secret.

Newspaper and television pictures of him showed only the back of his head or a partial side view.

WOOD, WHO has been on the force only 10 months, infiltrated the pro - Castro, pro - Red Chinese Black Liberation Front.

Because of him, the plot by three terrorists and a blonde Canadian girl to dynamite the Statue of Liberty, the Liberty Bell and the Washington Monument failed.

Police Commissioner Michael J. Murphy was so impressed by Wood's job that he promoted him to detective third grade Tuesday as soon as the four alleged conspirators were arrested.

It was the first time that Murphy had made an "on the spot" promotion in his five years as police commissioner.

BUT A police spokesman said that Murphy had "second thoughts" about the promotion and decided to give Wood another one.

"Late last night, the commissioner got to thinking about what a great job this man had done during his life and breaking up this conspiracy and sent an order to raise him another grade to second grade detective," the spokesman said.

The two promotions gave him a total salary increase of $1,925 a year to $8,372 annually.

"He is considered of such great value, that even though he was exposed to the press and the back of his head was seen in newspaper pictures and on television, it was decided to keep him in undercover work with the Bureau of Special Services," the spokesman said.

ARRESTED AS a result of Wood's work were Robert Collier, 28, a public library employe and self - styled leader of the Black Liberation Front; Walter Bowe, 32, a judo instructor; Khaleel Sultarn Sayyed, 22, a student, and blonde television personality Michelle Duclos, 28, of Montreal.

The conspiracy was smashed when Miss Duclos and two unidentified men drove across the Canadian U. S. border with 30 sticks of dynamite and blasting caps.

Once she arrived in New York, she called Wood to come and get the explosives. He in turn contacted Collier. Detectives were waiting when they picked up the dynamite.

MISS DUCLOS was a member of a Quebec separatist party, Rassemblement Pour L'Independence.

It was learned that authorities in Canada were investigating the possibility that the dynamite might have come from the same source as explosives used by the terrorist Quebec Liberation Front (FLQ) which conducted a campaign of terror in the province last year by placing bombs in mail boxes.

Poll tells present attitudes of race

NEW YORK, (UPI)—Seven out of eight colored Americans now back non-violent civil rights activities, according to a nation-wide survey conducted by a professional pollster for Newsweek Magazine.

The survey in the current issue of the magazine s a id that four out of five colored Americans believe substantial civil rights gains have been made — m a i n l y through non - violent demonstrations — and will continue to be made during the next five years.

Newsweek said that only one in six believes that last year's racial riots accomplished anything toward obtaining civil rights for their race.

THE MAGAZINE reported that colored citizens believe 12 to one that the new civil rights act has opened doors previously closed to them. An over-whelming 47 to one believe that the Civil Rights Acts will bring progress in the future in desegregating schools, jobs and voting rights.

cent approval was given to the leadership of the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Nobel Prize winner and leader of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference.

Those polled a l s o expressed approval by 92 percent of the NAACP, 70 percent for the Congress of Racial Equality and 60 percent for the National Urban League.

FIVE OUT of six do not believe the "average" colored American was involved in last summer's riots, which affected New York, Philadelphia, Rochester, N.Y., Elizabeth and Jersey City, N.J., and the Chicago area.

Only in 33 singled o u t specific persons as ringleaders in the riots, according to the magazine. Most blamed extremist groups as Muslims, Black Nationalists, Communists, the Ku Klux Klan or the White Citizens Councils for the disorders.

Almost all looked back on the racial riots as damaging, the magazine survey indicated.

ONLY FIVE per cent of those surveyed approved of the Black Muslims and 64 per cent rejected them and their program. The balance had no opinion on the sect.

The magazine said those questioned now consider the South more promising for their future and two-thirds living there say they would not move North if they could.

cameras and sound equipment while other troopers were clubbing the demonstrators. Most of them complied.

State troopers escorted reporters out of town through the threatening crowds.

There have been almost daily demonstrations here in the county seat of Perry County for the past several weeks, and there were no incidents except for the first few days, when hundreds were arrested. There was a night march Wednesday. It was uneventful.

The Rev. Lionel Langford, who has led King's drive in Marion, 30 miles from Selma said police "had been telling me they were pun-protection but its hard for me to see it like that right now."

"They came on against us so swift with these clubs and things we could hardly tell what was happening," he said. His daughter Edna, 14, was clubbed in the side but he didn't think she was "hurt too badly."

The officers took one of the leaders, Willie Bolen, called him an outside agitator. They grabbed another man while he was praying and slammed him against the concrete and began to drag him."

Police would make no comment and a man in the Perry County sheriff's department, asked about reporters feared in danger, said "I don't know anything about 'em and don't care nothing about 'em."

MEANWHILE, in New York, 300 colored teen - age demonstrators demanding faster school integration rioted in Brooklyn on a secret signal, battling police with bricks,' bottles and fists and terrorizing a crowded shopping district.

Shouting "let's loot," the howling youngsters swept through a downtown section smashing store windows along Flatbush Ave. and jostling and cursing lunch - hour shoppers. It was the second day of integration riots in Brooklyn.

Police used nightsticks to break up the roving mobs. Many of the teen agers and adults were taken into custody. Four adults were charged with violating state education laws and one with disorderly conduct.

Probe of Klan gets HHH nod

Reports that the House Committee on Un-American Activities may investigate the Ku Klux Klan brought favorable comment Saturday from Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey.

On a bird hunting trip near Thomasville, Ga., Humphrey said in an interview that "many" of the Klan's activities "have been Un-American."

Last week, the House committee chaired by Rep. Edwin E. Willis (D. La.) unanimously approved a resolution authorizing the continuance of "preliminary inquiries" into certain matters brought before it including Klan probes.

Accused plotter called 'strange'

Who is Khaleel Sultarn Sayyed?

People who knew him as a Howard University student here never thought he would become involved in anything approaching an earth shaking matter.

But this week Sayyed "shocked" all of his acquaintances when it became known in page one stories that he was among four persons arrested Tuesday by the FBI and police in New York City in an unprecedented, weird plot to bomb the Washington Monument, the Statue of Liberty and the Liberty Bell.

At Howard where he was an electrical engineering student from September 1960 to June 1964, he was described by some students as aloof, a young man who kept to himself.

But others characterized him as a person whose personality ranged from "amiable" to that of an "odd ball," one who was always seeking the center of the stage in the classroom and bull sessions.

"He impressed me as being an odd ball," said Edward Johnson, an architectural student. "He liked to be seen or noticed. He had something to say about everything. I remember him because he used to speak out all the time."

HIS LANDLORD thought he was a brilliant student "because he was always studying late," but in actuality he was a poor one.

He was placed on academic probation for flunking grades and failed to return to Howard last fall for what could have been his graduation year.

In the Howard Air Force ROTC, some fellow cadets rated him as an exemplary military officer trainee ("he was gung ho," was one appraisal of him). But there were others who degraded him, saying his views were not consistent with that of a good Airman.

Howard records show agreement with both conflicting views. He was an outstanding ROTC cadet, the records indicate, but they also tell that he was booted out after the half way mark of the four year course.

Howard ROTC officialdom contends that he was dismissed because his overall conduct was not becoming to an officer, but there are some students who say the "real reason" for the dismissal stems from a letter Sayyed sent to Howard ROTC officials.

In the letter, Sayyed said, according to the press, that he was through with the military because he thought the colored man should not be obligated to fight abroad when he is deprived to civil rights at home.

Except for his actions that indicated he may be a Black Muslim, students interviewed by the AFRO said they never heard Sayyed espouse any political views, however, on Tuesday the bombing plot in which he was involved was allegedly the work of three extremists groups with which he is said to be linked.

The group are: Black Liberation Front, Quebec Separatist Party and the Fair Play for Cuba Committee.

"He would only eat dark bread," was one student's reply as to why he suspected Sayyed was a Black Muslim.

AS TO SAYYED'S affiliation with organizations outside the campus, it could only be ascertained that he was a member of the Washington Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee, a civil rights group.

However, James Cary, associate dean of students, said that in the fall of 1963, Sayyed, the son of an Arab family in Brooklyn, was known as a supporter of the views of Mao Tse-tung, Chinese communist party boss.

Cary said Sayyed defended these views but was "never argumentative" or a "rabble rouser."

JOHN W. KNIGHT, electrical engineering instructor who had Sayyed in two of his classes, simply described him as a "well behaved, conscientious student." He refused to elaborate further.

But who is Khaleel Sultarn Sayyed? As is evident, few agree on the answers.

ARTHUR RANDOLPH, the accused plotter's landlord from Sept. 1962 to April 1963, spoke highly of Sayyed and recalled that he, like others who knew him, was "not surprised but shocked" when he learned that his former tenant was involved in the bomb plan.

"He was a quiet fellow," said Randolph who lives in the 1100 block Fairmount St., NW where Sayyed rented a single room.

"He respected my home and my wife."

Randolph said he viewed Sayyed and a good student because he "seemed to be studying all the time." Randolph added that he was surprised to know that the former Howard student had failed to graduate. "I thought he had gotten his degree and left."

JEFFERY ALSTON, a senior engineering student who met Sayyed as a fellow member of the University's track team, said he remembered the native New Yorker more for his determination than any of his abilities.

"I ran track with him," recalled Alston. "He had more determination than anything else. He never won anything but kept trying. That's the thing that impressed me most about him."

Magnus Blanchette, another architectural student, saw Sayyed in a different light. Telling of bull sessions in which Sayyed had taken part Blanchette recalled that his ex-classmate was attracted to sensational topics.

"He liked things that were dramatic," said Blanchette. "If the subject wasn't crisp or with a flash, it wasn't for him...but he was a nice guy."

LARRY BARNETT, an electrical engineering senior, said he met Sayyed in a class they had together in 1962. Barnett described him as a "jovial, amiable type."

"We used to tease him about not digging girls," recalled Barnett. "He didn't seem to like girls."

Unlike Barnett, Rodney Guishard Jr., also an engineering student, indicated that he didn't think Sayyed was too gregarious. "He was aloof," said Guishard, seemingly finding difficulty in his search for accurate words of discription.

Khaleel Sultarn Sayyed, the third son of a grocer, was born in the Bedford Stuyvesant area of Brooklyn on Dec. 6, 1942.

NEIGHBORS IN HIS Brooklyn neighborhood characterize him as a carefree youngster who dressed casually and rode a motorcycle.

Speaking of Sayyed's dress, a dapper, pipe puffing Howard student, who requested that he not be identified, said the accused plotter's clothing seemed to reflect his poor showing in classwork.

"Before he started having real bad grade trouble, he was rather sharp. But after he saw he was about to be washed out, he let himself go."

Students said Sayyed, a medium built youth, wore turtle necked sweaters that became his trademark. He wore his hair "long, wild and natural."

IN ADDITION to Sayyed, others charged with conspiring to destroy government property are:

Michelle Duclos of Montreal, Canada, 26, described as a "tall, striking blonde"; Walter Augustus Bowe of New York 32, who reportedly has conceded he supports Fidel Castro and is a member of the Fair Play for Cuba Committee and Robert Stiele Collier of Manhattan, 28, who calls himself a leader of the Black Liberation Front.

Chicago alderman's brother, 51, dies

CHICAGO (NPI) — Funeral services were held here last week for John Roscoe Harvey, 51 - year - old brother of Alderman William H. Harvey, who was stricken with double pneumonia and died after an illness of several weeks.

Services were conducted from the funeral chapel of Miller, Major and Ocklebery Mortuary.

A resident of Chicago for the past 10 years, the deceased was a foreman of maintenance with the city police department. During his high school years at Sumner High in St. Louis, and at Lincoln University, Jefferson City, Mo., he was an outstanding athlete. He was considered to be one of the foremost baseball pitchers at that time, and had contracted to play with one of the major colored teams, the Kansas City Monarchs.

UNITED NATIONS REPORT:

Rigged elections in Congo won't fool African leaders

By CHARLES P. HOWARD
UN Correspondent

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. —The big push is now on in the Congo to get Premier Moise Tshombe elected under the new constitution. The hope is to give him legal status as the elected head of the Congo, believing that African heads of states who now refuse to sit in council with him will be hard put not to accept the legally elected head of the Congo.

Unlike our system of voting directly for a presidential candidate, representatives of the political parties contest against one another in the various political subdivisions, and the party leader of the party winning the legal requirement of seats in Parliament becomes Prime Minister after having been asked by the head of state to form the government.

Tshombe has already announced the creation of a new political party under him which will function nationally. There is no possibility of an election, with a semblance of fairness, being held in the Congo at this time.

THIS, OF course, is exactly why the power structure wants this election held as quickly as possible, so as not to give time for any opposition to be organized. Already the power structure, through Tshombe, has out - lawed every leader that is supposed to have anything to do with, or to approve in any fashion, opposition or resistance to Tshombe.

In addition to this in every area where the Tshombe forces have recaptured the territory they have promptly executed all the leaders of the opposition. This program of execution of all of Tshombe's opponents has gone on since he came to power in the Congo in July.

THE AFRICANS in the Congo have no voice in this selection of candidates, party principles, party platform or anything. There will just be one party and that will be Tshombe's party. Every other grouping will be illegal.

The elections will be held under Tshombe's domination and he will pronounce the rules. This is dictatorship pure and simple. Tshombe has conducted a dictatorship since last July with no parliament and no restraint from the Congolese people either above or below.

This white strategy is now being invoked from outside with the hope of being able to present Tshombe to the world as a legitimate representative of the Congolese people, chosen by them. While as a matter of fact, every device conceivable to prevent a democratic election is being carried on.

THERE IS a great desire, also, at this time, to center as much outside attention as possible on the supposed elections, so that Tshombe can evade negotiating any of his problems with the "resistance movement."

Another grand design to give Tshombe acceptability among other Africans is the announcement, with much fanfare, of the "historic victory" in the Brussels negotiations which ended with an agreement by the Belgians to give a portfolio of shares worth about 300 million.

These shares were held by the Belgian Government in private companies operating in the Congo.

Actually, the negotiation for these shares was effected by Premier Prime Minister Adoula almost a year ago. Legally, these shares became the property of the Congolese Government on the day they became independent.

But the Belgium Government and Belgian businessmen have held on to them and collected the interest and earnings on them about as long as they could awaiting an opportune time to release them. This was all a part of the grand design to keep the Congo in turmoil so as to milk it of the last drop possible.

THERE is one thing that should be kept in mind. When Tshombe first began these negotiations he made it plain that these negotiations had nothing to do with "nationalizing foreign business" in the Congo.

It should be recalled that Union Miniere du Haut Katanga, the fabulously wealthy mining operation in Katanga paid taxes and royalties to Tshombe rather than to the Central Government where they were legally due.

The people of the Congo received no benefit from the money paid Tshombe, the people of the Congo will not benefit from this last maneuver.

The boast is that this move will get Tshombe many votes. That may be true but it will not fool one head of an African state. They know what is going on.

Come negotiations with loud fanfare, or public gimmicks to make a new image for Tshombe, or not, the leaders in Africa know Tshombe for what he is. And if elected in a "power structure frame up election," the revolution against him will continue by the people in the Congo who want freedom.

Bullets - Philly promises battle of big centers

Two of the National Basketball Association's three outstanding big men are to oppose at center when the Baltimore Bullets meet the Philadelphia 76ers at Washington Coliseum Monday night.

Wilt Chamberlain, fantastic seven foot, one inch, 275-pound super-giant of the 76-ers, will, in this instance, oppose Walt Bellamy, the Bullets' 6-11, 245-pound skyscraper.

Chamberlain, Bellamy and the Boston Celtics' Bill Russell generally are conceded to be the NBA's best big men at center, possessing both scoring and rebounding productivity that is outstanding.

UNPRECEDENTED interest is being evidenced in this first NBA game played at the Coliseum since the Original Washington Capitols disbanded there in January of 1951.

The Bullets are respected as giant-killers in the NBA, and appear a certainty to win a place in the circuit's championship playoff series.

BALTIMORE is riding in No. 3 spot in the NBA's Western Division and until recently was fighting the St. Louis Hawks for runner-up position to the Los Angeles Lakers, the divisional leader.

A lame ankle suffered by Gus Johnson is proving a distinct handicap to the Bullets, but they are capable of beating the best when in top stride.

Ethel Ennis scores with song by Cahn

Singer Ethel Ennis, appearing on the Regis Philbin TV show last Friday night, so impressed Sammy Cahn, writer of "Love Has Gone", with her treatment of his song that he promised her a trip back to the West Coast if the song won the Academy Award this year.

Miss Ennis, who is currently appearing at the Red Fox Lounge in Baltimore, has appeared on a number of recent TV shows and is regarded as one of the finest singers around.

Are the Black Muslims a Fraud?

Yes says Aubrey Barnette an ex-official of the much-feared Muslim movement, in the current Saturday Evening Post. The Muslims, no less than the Ku Klux Klan, want to "keep the Negro in his place."

—Barnette was a Muslim official for three years. He quit because he was tired of being hoodwinked and of hoodwinking others. Why was he given the beating of his life by a squad of Muslim goons? Did the Muslims try to murder Malcolm X? Is the Muslim movement another "slave -master" to the Negro?
