2,800 treated for poisoning in 1964

Dr. Robert E. Farber commissioner of health, has reported that nearly 2,800 persons were treated last year in hospital emergency rooms for accidental poisoning. Of this number, most were children.

In observation of National Poison Prevention Week which ends Saturday, the commissioner again urges parents to exercise extreme vigilance in seeing that medicines and all poisons are kept out of reach of children.

Aspirin, a seemingly harless substance, rates a number one among poisoning agent affecting children.
