—Dunbar CORE

School officials twice in less than a week.

Including Mrs. Harrison and Mrs. Keene members were the Rev. Robert Clark and James Griffin, CORE representatives; Mrs. Mae Locks, Mrs. Elsie Gladden and Miss Blondecette Brown, a 12th grade business education pupil, representing CORE, the student group.

Visits at the 25th St. City School headquarters Thursday, March 11, and Tuesday, March 16, included lengthy conferences with:

Edwin Stein, acting superintendent; Eli Frank Jr., president of the Board of School Commissioners; Dr. Vernon S. Vavrina, assistant superintendent of secondary education; Sidney N. Chernak, director of junior and senior high schools; Mrs. Lillian Murphy, area director; Gordon Woelper, director of secondary schools, Eastern Division; William Hucksoll, director of Vocational Education.

REPORTS stemming from the conferences were:

The old Poly building will not become the new Dunbar.

Renovations are almost complete in the Dunbar Home Economics department.

IBM Keypunch machines and typewriters have been installed in the Business Education Department in addition to $30,000 worth of new items recently put in.

September, 1965 will see completed the new $75,000 heating system and the new Science Laboratory.

In 1964, Dunbar had an accreditation rating of very good in 11 areas and good in five areas.

More special equipment is due to be installed within days.

Additional materials and equipment will come from educational funds to be shared by Baltimore Public Schools.

A new inter-communication system is ready to be installed.

Dunbar is not over-crowded. Some rooms are empty.

Plans for the proposed new building for Dunbar, according to the PTA report, is to be taken by school officials to Urban Renewal committee already at work on the East Baltimore area where Dunbar is located.

PTA REPRESENTATIVES reported Mr. Stein as "shocked" that "outsiders" were in on problems that the PTA should take to school authorities.

Noteworthy was the portion of the report that revealed a student went as she read a list of Dunbar's needs to school officials.

Mrs. Harrison said the school executives' comment was, "parents, the tax payers, can get the new building and other needs supplied in time, if they keep pressing."

Mr. Diggs expressed agreement with the PTA on "necessity of parents working together."

He announced Summer School schedules include special enrichment classes in all subject areas for eligible students who pay required fees.

Also, students repeating subjects must "make-up" for the entire school year rather than just the semester they failed to pass.

He also listed the many educationally beneficial programs both students and adults are offered through the Anti-Poverty Program division sponsored by the US Department of Education and Job Corps Training projects plus other recent innovations.

AMONG THE speakers were Walter Carter, chairman of CORE's Housing Committee; Lee Andrew Douglass, 1942 Dunbar alumnus; Mrs. Hazel Woods, also a former Dunbar student.

Mr. Carter outlined CORE's role in light of "my own experience as a parent and teacher."

He stated: "I know the school's limitations. The school in a segregated society has what is wrong for the colored man and what is right for the white man."

Quoting Dr. Martin Luther King's book, "Why We Can't Wait," Mr. Carter, a former Baltimore CORE president, said, "The gap between the white child and the colored child is growing wider and wider."

Mr. Carter described the inner city school systems as "grossly unequal" and "deprived."

And, he emphasized, "Since PTAs traditionally work along with the local system, society outside the schools must step in to get the best results."

"CORE wants the best in education for our children. Schools need the kind of program that will wipe out 100 years of segregation, 300 years of slavery, textbooks that only mention colored personalities and history "in one paragraph on Page 498" and one that will "get equality now."

MR. DOUGLASS, a cab driver, was present with his wife, Mrs. Gloria Douglass, also a former Dunbar student. One of their six children attends Dunbar.

He urged parents to work together, students to study hard as he wished he had done. To emphasize, he concluded, "Wake up, we as colored citizens are sleeping giants."

Mrs. Woods received sustained applause as she stated in cheer-leader fashion, "Call CORE thank-well and then, parents, go on from here. Work together and stick together."

—Foster care

no foster homes or institutions were available for their placement.

"Many of our present foster homes are overcrowded and strained almost to the breaking point," it went on.

The agency, along with many other public agencies, feels that more families who love children would become foster parents if the allowance for the child's care would come closer to the amount actually needed for comfortable care.

Twenty post bail, released in Selma

SELMA, Ala., (UPI) — Twenty arrested demonstrators, including two women, were released Thursday when they finally signed bonds.

Earlier the group had refused to sign release bonds and police had refused to jail them or let them go. The group was allowed free run of the second floor of City Hall where the courtroom and police headquarters are located.

Police Chief Wilson Baker said the group agreed this morning to sign the bonds and was sent on its way. Baker had hamburgers sent to the group Wednesday night.

The demonstrators were arrested Wednesday when they tried to picket the mayor's house following a mass march on the Dallas County Courthouse.

Baker said the pickets, including many ministers, had been charged with parading without a permit. He accused them of breaking a promise not to demonstrate further.

About half the demonstrators had refused to post $200 bond. The others posted bond and went free. Most had taken part in an earlier demonstration by 600 persons, who stood in a driving rain and hailstorm singing and praying at the courthouse.

Boy surrenders in subway death

NEW YORK — Christopher Lynch, 17, walked into the 123rd St. Precinct station early Wednesday and ended an intensive search for the youth mounted after the subway train murder of 17-year-old white boy.

The six-foot-four-inch, 210-pound teenager, whose mother said he had an inferiority complex about his great size, faces charges in the knife slaying of Andrew Marmile, who was killed when he came to the aid of three girls being molested on the train.

The manhunt for Lynch began after a telephone tip led police to Terry Toomer, 18, who allegedly told them he and Lynch had followed the girls onto the train and began molesting them. Police said Lynch became enraged when Mormile tried to interfere, and stabbed him.

—Car sticker law

pany's sticker on the insured auto's windshield, along with the period of insurance, for proof of coverage.

"This," Mr. Wallace stated, "would remove the ability to finance these policies.

"Basically, insurance financing is predicated on the ability of the party financing the policy to affect cancellation with just cause. This would affect such cancellations."

Should a motorist under the popular monthly payment plan not pay his premium as required, he said, the insuring company would have to retrieve the car sticker to cancel the policy, or still be held liable in case of an accident.

Mr. Wallace voiced the fears of others in the auto insurea industry, in stating that the bill's requirements that the insurer be notified by registered letter or in person of a cancellation would be impracticable.

S. B. 120 is now before the House's Banking and Insurance Committee, where early indications are it is in for a stormy consideration.

Del. James H. Caldwell (D. Wicomico), committee chairman, a bitter foe of the proposal, has said he will use "every legal means" to kill the measure.
