Worklinvolved in computer program

WASHINGTON—(NNPA) Probably all processed in the connection computer must first be carefully analyzed so that plans can be in the most efficient manner. In some cases, this work is done by an experienced programer; in others, it is done by specialists known as methods analysts, project planners, or systems analysts.

Once general plans have been [illegible] the programer begins the work of writing detailed plans for processing data on a computer. Exactly how she does this depends on the nature of the problem being programed.

* * *

THE MATHEMATICAL calculations involved in preparing the bill, examining data from other files, and many other kinds of arithmetical and logical techniques are also very different. Special techniques are required also in writing programing "aids" which reduce the amount of detail associated with programing. Because of these differences, many programers are specialists in certain types of work.

* * *

UNDER MOST circumstances, the programer starts preparing instructions for a computer by conferring with professional staff members and other officials in her organization who are in a position to furnish her with detailed information about the subject matter of the problem.
