MUSICAL MOMENTS

Two operas at Peabody are reviewed, school on air

By ADAH K. JENKINS

The "celestial" and the "terrestial" vied for converts at the Peabody Opera Company's production last week of "The Impresario" and "The Masque of the Angels".

Both one - act operas were conducted ably by Norman Johnson, with the successful innovation of the orchestra being placed on the rear of the stage rather than in the pit.

"Impresario", a comedy with incidental music by Mozart, revolved about the trials the conductor of an opera company encounters with two rival sopranos and their sponsor.

The comedy was handed broadly by a cast that was especially effective in ensemble numbers. Bette LeBrun and Lambrys Mavrikas exhibited well schooled coloratura soprano voices.

Jack Hall, as "the Impresario", Richard Jones, his assistant, and Gene Ford, the sponsor, completed a well-balanced cast.

"THE MASQUE" by the contemporary composer, Dominick Argento, a Peabody graduate, with libretto by John Olo-Scrymgeau (a Baltimorean), is patterned after the lavish English 17th century production.

The Peabody performance marked its premiere on the Eastern coast. The work which was commissioned last year, was given first in Minneapolis.

The importation of John Work Jr. from New York, to sing the leading role of the "Arch - Angel", afforded the part an experienced singer, with excellent baritone equipment and handsome presence.

His was a performance of distinction, especially notable in the two arias and clarity of diction throughout the opera.

His staff of "top angels" was efficiently manned by Charles Younger, with a well produced baritone, Van Bilck, Lee Ledlon and Roy Perdue.

The story concerns the efforts of the "angelic hosts" to aid two lovers, whose path to happiness is blocked by an aged professor and his spinster friend.

Delightful humor as well as pointed and timely references to peace and good will added to the enjoyment of the opera.

Paulette Schmidt and John Atherton, as the lovers; Joan Davis and Ronald Oakes, in the roles of the bachelor and spinster, gave expressive performances.

* * *

THE FOUR "Virtue Dancers", with choreography by Dale Schmerr, were especially enjoyable when entangled in their own good deeds, represented by yards of white rope, to variations on "Blest Be the Tie".

The intercultural "angelic choir", appropriately robed in blue and gold, exhibited superior training.

The opera was admirably staged by Edward Golden Jr., with fine effects in the processionals.

Credits were deserved by David Rodgers and Scott Bushnell for settings, lights and costumes. The Peabody Opera Company is directed by Frank Valentino.

MAIL - BOX: Received from the Baltimore tenor, Robert Wilson, who sang recently as guest of the Harry Belafonte Show in the Latin Casino at Cherry Hill, N. J., following a two - week engagement in Europe and making of Columbia Records.

ON - THE - AIR: The highly successful television series done last year by the kindergarten of School No. 25, Westport, was repeated this eason.

At one of the programs heard recently musical instruments were used cleverly to depict charkcters in a fairy tale. In a colonial episode the engaging young dancers were accompanied on the xylophone and auto - harp played by their instructor, Mrs. Mabel H. Grant, who has been in charge of the programs.

George A. Schwarzmann is principal of School 228.
