At 1 a.m. a bar owner tells why the bars colored—looks to next year

By J. LINN ALLEN

"Is this an integrated bar?"

I asked the question because I knew the bartender and because I had just said goodbye to a friend who though on his way to a party would have come in with me for a beer but didn't because he thought it wasn't.

It was about 1 o'clock on a Sunday morning and I just wanted a short beer and then go home and go to bed.

"No, it isn't," was the reply.

He gave me a draft and went to fill a few empties for people who were yelling around the crowded bar. But he came back and nodded at me.

"Now I know where you work," he said.

"I work at the AFRO-AMERICAN," I said. "How do you knoww wthan?"

"Somebody told me," he said, mentioning a girl who used to work there but quit some time back.

"I ASKED because I wanted to know whether I can bring my friends in here," I said.

"I've seen you talking with some outside on the corner," he said.

"Well, I don't want them to get in any trouble," I said. "That's why I asked."

He went to service the bar. It was full of people like me who couldn't bring themselves to go home before they had to.

He returned again.

"Next year, in about 11 months, we'll have it, but not now. It was up in the legislature this year," he said, "but Verda Welcome killed it."

This was completely wrong. Her opponents weakened the bill so much it wasn't worth passing. But anyway I asked him, "How did that happen?"

"She didn't think it was strong enough," he said, "and that's why she killed it."

YOU CAN'T argue with logic like that. I thought we had about covered the subject, but he continued, with some emotion.

"It's not me, I don't care a d— who I serve."

I nodded. At 1 a.m. Sunday morning I'm not that interested in taking the cause further. But he was bothered.

"Look," he said, "if we served everybody in here I'd lose business. I don't give a d— who I serve, but I'm in this business to make money."

I nodded again. And drank my beer.

"You know what would happen" he said. "We'd have fights. I'm responsible for everything that goes on in this bar. If somebody got in a fight in here I could be sued. That's what would happen."

I said it was true he was probably responsible for fights in the bar.

"That's right," he said. "You know why I work behind this bar six nights a week, ten hours a night I work to make money. And if I served everybody in here I'd lose money."

I SIPPED my beer, and stared at him, not because I didn't understand him, but because if I stared at him now I knew he'd keep on talking.

"You're a big guy," he said, "but if you got in a fight, it would be my responsibility to protect you. But let me tell you, if the federal government tells me who I've got to serve, then as far as I'm concerned, I don't have any responsibility to protect you at all."

I continued to stare at him. He turned away, and then muttered over his shoulder, "By you I mean everybody, generally."

He took money for a beer on the other side of the bar and slammed the drawer to the cash register. I finished what was left in my glass and walked out.

Maybe next I'll s.

Maybe next year I'll go back. c
