Estate of Gebhardt Bornmuller.
Claim of Widow to Deposit in Bank by Husband
Opinion of Court.

Originally the husband made the deposit in his own name alone, subsequently he changed it by pulling it in his name jointly with that of his wife making it subject to the order of either or to the survivor. The husband has since departed this life.

Question. Does the deposit so made belong to the surviving wife, now the widow, is it a part of the depositor's estate.

The form of the deposit brings it under the legal rules of gift inter vivos, which require in order to make the gift complete, that there must be an absolute surrender on the part of the donor of all dominion over the thing given, and that the transfer thus made to the donee must go into effect immediately 48 md 550. These two things are essential to complete the gift.

Did the depositor in this case give up his dominion over the thing given and did the gift take effect immediately in the donee.

On the contrary as a matter of fact it was in his name & subject to his order all the time he was in condition to lift the whole of it from the Bank or change it at any time. Surely this was no surrender of his dominion or control over the deposit and how could it so have passed into the wife immediately on the making of the deposit - as to make it hers & independently of his control.

As to the transfer of the Bank book to the wife & her custody of it during his life, that according to a well known decision of the Court of Appeals did not transfer the money which is reported 41 md 466.

The opinion of the Court therefore is that the deposit belongs to the estate of the depositor, and that it is necessary in order that the wife, now widow, should get her share of it in connection with other legal distributives that it be administered and used over
