VOLUNTEERS AT HOPKINS include Miss Martha Scholz; left; Miss Verna Whiten, upper center; Misses Yvonne Matthews and Nancy Elsner lower center, and Miss Jacquline Brown, right.

Candy stripes and white shirts; sign of 80 Hopkins' volunteers

Unlike many teenagers who spend their summer vacation keeping cool or working for pay, 80 ambitious students representing 40 high schools in the Maryland area, perform duties as junior volusteers at the Johns Hopkins Hospital.

Seventy girls, clad in candy - striped uniforms, and 10 boys, in white shirts and trousers, spend two or three days each week aiding Hopkins patients and personnel.

The youngsters work and acquaint themselves with almost all facets of the hospital. But the most popular section for all of them is the Child Life Program section. Here they work with small children.

SELECTION of junior volunteers is made following an individual interview with the director of volunteers.

To qualify, the young people must be responsible and intelligent, in good physical condition, willing to take instruction and able to offer a sufficient amount of time to service.

Not only do the junior volunteers select their assignments according to their interest, but they also receive instruction in their duties.

The Junior Volunteer Program is open to girls and boys between 15 and 18 years of age. Its purpose is to provide auxiliary assistance to patients and staff, as well as help them acquire knowledge and experience on which to make wise career choices.

Their horizons are widened by assisting in the various regular duties as messengers, ward aides, clinic aides, occupational therapy assistants, library and office workers, pediatric play program helpers and other useful jobs.

MRS. VIVIEN ROSS, director of volunteer services at Hopkins, explained that many of the junior volunteers plan health careers and return each summer until their high school graduations.

Verna Whiten of Douglass is one such student. An active and good worker, Miss Whiten is in her second summer of service. She worked during the school months on Saturdays as a volunteer.

Another volunteer, Ruth Ann White, a 1965 graduate of Patterson Park High is in her third summer and will enter the Johns Hopkins Hospital School of Radiologic Technology in September.

The other junior volunteers are:

Barbara Collins, Martin Brown, Elizabeth Koppelman - Martz - Scholz; Mary Ann Bowman, and Linda A. Bowman,

Debbie David and Kathy Stephenson; Anne Burns, Lee Edwards, Sandy Simmons, Evelyn Knowles, Rebecca McChung, Sally Morgan and Mary Snodgrass;

St. James home for elderly ok'ed

Zoning roadblocks were cleared Tuesday by the Board of Municipal and Zoning Appeals for the construction of a mammoth apartment project for the elderly in the 800 block Arlington Ave.

The proposed project, under sponsorship of St. James Episcopal Church and incorporated as the St. James Terrace Apartments, was before the board seeking exemptions on three restrictions.

1. Requested was approval to erect an 11-story project.

2. Relief was asked on the limitations of population density, on the grounds that there will likely be less people in the area though more family units which will house not more than two people each.

3. Also sought was a reduction of the number of parking spaces required for such a project, in that the elderly tenants would have less need for them.

IN GRANTING the exemptions, Gilbert Rubin, the board's executive secretary, said he thought this would be a stabilizing project for the area and helpful in the appreciation of the other properties.

He pointed out that this first aged home in the area is in line with President Lyndon B. Johnson's appeal for more attention to the elderly.

The project will be located on the east side of Arlington Ave., facing Lafayette Square, and will take the entire frontage of the block between Lanvale St. and Lafayette Ave., with the exception of St. James Church.

It is estimated it will cost nearly $2,000,000. Dallas F. Nicholas is attorney for the sponsoring corporation.

In other action, the board rejected an appeal to allow the operation of a day nursery for 50 children at 1032 N. Eden St.

Approved was an appeal to permit the construction of a one-story dwelling at 5503 Kennison Ave., with a reduced rear yard.

PLEASANT EVENING — Mrs. Helen Brown watches slides from the new project presented to the YWCA's Senior Citizens Lounge at the George B. Murphy Homes. The projector was given to the lounge by the Northwestern Protective Association. Mrs. Susie Hilburn, president of the association, made the presentation.

Center for 'seniors' given slide projector

The Northwest United Protective Association presented a slide projector and screen to the YWCA Senior Citizens Center at the George B. Murphy Homes last Wednesday.

A committee from the Association headed by Mrs. Susie Hilburn, president, presented the gift in response to a plea from the steering committee of the Center for program equipment.

The Center, which was opened under the direction of the YWCA at the request of BURHA, operates without a budget.

It is located in the unit of the Murphy Homes where many senior citizens are housed. Open five days a week from nine to five under the direction of Mrs. Gladys Patterson, all senior citizens are welcome whether they live in the project or not.

MRS. HILBURN introduced the members of her organization who were present, including Miss Sarah Sampson, vice president; Mrs. Bessie Butler, Mrs. Beatrice Garrett and Mrs. Eulalia Mallory.

Mrs. Hilburn was introduced by Mrs. Lillian S. Watty, chairman of the steering committee. Mrs. Rosa P. Butler, president of the Women's Club, made the response for the Center.

After viewing slides, a social hour was held.

Mrs. Nettie Green, 79, dies; buried in W. Va.

Mother of 13 children, four of whom survive, Mrs. Nettie Green, 79, 1108 Druid Hill Ave., was buried in her native home, Harper's Ferry, W. Va.

Funeral services were held Wednesday at the Eakles Funeral Home and burial was in the Cedar Hill Cemetery there.

Mrs. Green, who died Sunday at the Lincoln Memorial Convalescent Home, was a member of Metropolitan Methodist Church in Baltimore.

HER PARENTS were Henry and Catherine Thomas.

Surviving are her husband, Arthur Green; two sons, Shirley and Arthur Green; and two daughters, Mrs. Rosalene Soden and Mrs. Dorothy Boone, of Baltimore.

A brother, Walter Thomas, of Baltimore; a sister, Mrs. Sannie Clark, of Washington; and ten grandcildren, also survive.

come about? Dr. Shepard outlined many of the techniques that have evolved since his program began in 1957:

"First you need to understand how these youngsters come to school—the conditions under which they leave the house.

"We do not believe learning culture is inherited . . . You must get at the heart and soul of these youngsters."

He explained that he first asked his teachers to stop teaching on the basis of I. Q. tests and to approach each child with a high level of expectancy, to give them "inspiration and aspiration."

"Let's approach these youngsters as if they all had I. Q.'s of 120 and were the sons or daughters of Dr. so-and-so."

Commenting on I. Q. tests, which measure mostly learning and not ability, Dr. Shepard observed that a disadvantaged child reading the word "sonata" on a test would probably "think you're talking about blowing your nose."

SECONDLY, the teachers are urged to "abandon your attitude of condescension. These people want to earn our respect."

Teachers are also asked to assign homework, even in the lowest grades, and parents are encouraged to enforce the home study rule.

Fourth, and probably most significant of the changes, is that visits to the homes of the children by teachers are made mandatory.

In addition to interesting parents in their children's education, the home visits also help with later discipline problems, Dr. Shepard said.

As a result, "our teachers are working harder and enjoying it more, because they are seeing results of their work," he noted.

THE MAIN technique, he said, is "involvement" — of "teachers, parents, ministers, everyone in the community.

"You must tackle whatever you're going to tackle at the same time, and have everyone trying to be the superintendent at the same time."

Dr. Shepard also advised that there is no harm in getting the students "to like you. If we're not going for them, who is?"

Another technique of the district is a heavy schedule of field trips, "to build up a vocabulary and concepts."

The trips include the zoo, hospitals and, notably, one for seventh graders called "Operation Dine Out," in which 1,100 students are taken to the 10 finest restaurants in St. Louis.

Recalling last year's successful "Operation Dine Out," Dr. Shepard said that only three of the 1,100 fainted.

"It was surprising how many of the so - called non - readers read those menus well. When you have these kinds of activities, what do you think happens to interest?," he asked.

OTHER TECHNIQUES include the requirement for each pupil to read five books a year and report on them, and the program of Mr. Achiever, a mythical figure whose motto is "Success in school is my most important business."

Mr. Achiever stars in a weekly radio show and supplies contests, hints, tips and handbooks for success in school.

Summing up, Dr. Shepard maintained that the most important aspect of Banneker's extensive program is the active participation and cooperation of the district's parents, teachers, ministers and agencies.

Coppin's summer Institute, which has enrolled 60 area teachers of disadvantaged children, is directed by Dr. Percy Williams, who is on leave from the State Department of Education.
