THIS WRITER'S Douglass high school classmate, now Mrs. Louise Kerr Hines, remembered, this week, how we rushed to look at the bulletin board outside the Wright Studio.

She said: — "In those days you had really arrived if your photo was on display. Usually pictures of the pretty girls like Geo Ashby, now Mrs. Robert Diggs, and the late Wahseelia Male, were there."

Mrs. Hines also recalled the 'big excitement,' when Mr. Wright gave students a bargain, a dozen small photos, we called them 'ping pong' shots for 25 cents.

"We used to exchange the 'ping pongs'. Then at graduation time, you could always depend on Mr. Wright to give you a 4 by 6 enlargement Free,' she said.

E. VICTOR WRIGHT
His Jolly, 'By George'

BORN IN Washington, 76 years ago, Mr. Wright attended Baltimore schools, where he early showed an interest in art.

He began the study of photography under the late Herman Eberbrick, who had a studio on W. Lexington St. Later he traveled abroad to continue his study.

His first studio was at Eutaw and Biddle Sts. He moved to 525 Druid Hill, in the same block with the YMCA in 1908.

MR. WRIGHT encouraged young photographers and helped establish photo associations. One of the first included as members Mr. Henderson, Dr. Louis Harmon, the late Babe Jones, among others.

Ten years ago, he was a charter member of Professional Photographers Association which elected him as president.

Among other officers: the late Frank Phillips, vice treasurer; and Ben Claiborne, secretary.

Other members included Joseph Nellie, William Bailey, Robert Turner, Hugo Lee, Ernest Cooper and Wardell Richardson.

IN HIS association with fellow photographers as well as with friends and neighbors, Mr. Wright was noted for his quick wit. He enjoyed a friendly debate on any subject.

At funeral services held at Cornerstone Baptist Church, his pastor, the Rev. Leon Kearse, remembered the church, as well as the church, as well as founder of the Virginia Club, and was president emeritus of the Men's Club.

He has an affable smile and low manner in which he was. Everywhere he went Victor Wright left a cheer.'

Residents of Druid Hill Ave., and the people who traveled this busy thoroughfare will not soon forget that 'Vic' Wright passed this way.

Youth, 16, held in armed robbery case

A 16 - year - old youth was ordered held for action of the grand jury Tuesday by Judge Basil A. Thomas after an 11-year-old boy accused him of taking his $15 wrist watch at knife point.

Held under $2,500 bail was Rufus Avery, 400 block E. 20th St.

The young complainant, Robert McCormick, 2100 block Homewood St., told the court that he and a companion Oliver Cooper, 10, also of the 400 block E. 20th St., were walking near North Ave. and Calvert St., when they were approached by

"He stood in our way and told us to give him a nickle and I told him that I didn't have any money, but he patted me down," McCormick testified.

THE YOUNGSTER said Avery took his wallet and told him he would return it if the boy gave him his wrist watch.

"I told him he could keep the wallet and he took a knife and put it on my chest and told me to shut up," testified the complainant.

McCormick testified that he took off his watch and gave it to Avery who then fled.

Avery was later arrested at his home and taken to Central Police Station.

Concerned Brethren plan special service

The Concerned Brethren of Baltimore will conduct a special worship service July 18 at the New Antioch Baptist Church, Hoffman and Eden Sts., at 7:30 p.m.

The Rev. Gaywood S. McQuire, executive secretary for the organization, said the service is another step to create more brotherly charity between all ministers."

—J. Brown on trial

she tell the jury if she had ever told the teacher she didn't know why; "I keep messing around with you. You don't have any money. I've got something good (Brown) going for me now."

She said she had never made the statement.

"Did you ever tell anyone Jim Brown would give $1,000 to get rid of you," Minor asked.

The witness replied, "No."

She denied a series of rapid fire questions asking whether Brown had beaten her before, offered her money, and had tried to get her out of his car.

MINOR SHIFTED his questions to statements she made to police in filing the charges. A dispute among attorneys over whether they could be submitted as evidence broke out and the judge adjourned court until Friday morning to study the question.

Miss Ayres, from whom defense attorneys had drawn an admissi n that the Board of Education had requested her to withdraw from school, broke into tears during later questioning and caused Judge Krupansky to cut short Wednesday's opening day hearing.

She returned to the witness stand Thursday morning for a resumption of her cross examination by Brown's chief counsel, Norman Minor. It was during the Wednesday afternoon cross questioning that the small, shapely, soft-voiced, 18-year-old girl broke down and became ill.

MINOR, one of the city's top criminal lawyers, said after the adjournment that Miss Ayres "used the usual device for thinking time" by becoming ill. He added, "it is not a matter of preparation (for Miss Ayres); it's a matter of self - preservation."

Minor was asking her about a telephone conversation she said took place Monday evening between her and Brown. The professional football fullback has denied making the call. Miss Ayres was asked why she had told her sister to listen in on the call.

SHE paused for several minutes, asking twice for the question to be repeated, was prodded by the judge and then was led from the courtroom, her hand clapped over her mouth.

Miss Ayres was the first prosecution witness to appear before the jury of seven women and five men, plus two alternates.

Minor's questioning indicated Miss Ayres would be back on the stand most of today for cross - examination.

ASSISTANT Prosecutor Albert Coris questioned Miss Ayres earlier Wednesday about her relationship with Brown and the night the beating allegedly occurred in an East Side Motel Room. She said she first met Brown, 29, at the home of a friend on May 12.

She said, Brown took her to the motel room the night of June 19, but not frequently had sexual intercourse with her twice and forced her to commit an unnatural sex act. She said she and Brown had willingly had sexual relations during previous "dates" at the motel.

Minor asked Miss Ayres about how many drinks she claimed Brown gave her in the motel room and about how many visits she made to the central police station on the Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday following the night of June 19-20.

MINOR also drew from Miss Ayres admissions she had not tried to telephone anyone or summon aid from motel employes during the spent in the room after seven hours she said she Brown allegedly left her at 5 a.m., June 20.

Under the attorney's questioning, she said she had left school on May 14 — two days after she first met Brown — when asked to do so by the Cleveland Board of Education. No other details on that subject were brought out.

BROWN's attractive wife, Sue, was not in the courtroom Wednesday afternoon when Miss Ayres took the stand.

She had been there all day Tuesday and Wednesday morning while selection of the jury was completed.

are soon to join the class of college graduated women and much of what they had to say proved quite interesting.

Morgan State College senior Miss Francine Lewis, who has wedding plans for August, 1966, said:

"Well, I'm not looking. You see, I'm engaged.

"We have been going together since 1960, before I even thought about going to college, and I certainly do not figure on finding someone else, just to marry someone on my educational level. The most immature fellows are in school."

MISS JACKIE SHEARS, an English teacher at Dunbar High School, "Miss Morgan" 1963-64:

"Yes, from the woman's point of view, it is very important that she "marry someone on her educational level, if for no other reason than to eliminate her feeling that she is superior to her mate.

"If the two people have similar educational background in common, she can feel that they are either on equal plains, which perhaps should not be, or that he is on a level above hers.

"It also adds some kind of intellectual basis and understanding to the relationship which is really important.

In addition to this the woman could be the kind of stimulus that the man would need.

"When a girl goes to college she is constantly meeting fellows who are seeking an education, so she is meeting those with similar educational backgrounds. But when I narrow it down to those other qualities that I am searching for in a mate, the task then becomes difficult."

MISS YVONNE HOWARD, junior at Morgan; elementary education:

"I don't think the fact that a man has finished four years of college is important. What really should be important is his general knowledge and how well he can handle himself.

"This is not important to women unless they are just looking for status and economic security which we all look for to a degree.

"That's really an unfair question. I think I've found the right man for me. If women don't get frantic about it and they have the right attitude (not being idealistic and looking for a dream man riding on a white horse) the right man will come along.

"If a woman carries herself in the correct manner, he should seek her out. After all, I think that most men know what they are looking for. As far as that 3-1 ratio is concerned, I just don't believe in it.

"If a woman does not carry herself in the proper way, perhaps she does not deserve him (the right man)."

MISS MARY SUE WELCOME, senior political science major at Morgan:

"I definitely think that the shortage of educated males is both depressing and disheartening, however, more depressing is the fact that there are not enough educated males but not enough males period.

"The only solution that I find is that young women will have to compete on the basis of intelligence, not looks. Nowadays, with the advances in cosmetics, beauty can be bought in a bottle.

"A high school diploma is not sufficient for a job or a husband.

"Even a college degree alone is becoming outdated. Victory in marrying an educated man will come only to those females who are well-armed.

"Preparation can be made only through institutions of higher learning.

"In theory, I will not be able to avoid the impact of the problem, because it will affect all young women with the same ideals that I possess. However, because I am fortunate enough to be exposed to young men who have the desired qualities, the impact will not be as great. This does not mean that I will rely solely on this esposure. I still feel a necessity to be well-prepared.

"I must note here that education alone is not enough. I also want a man whose sights are high.

"It goes without saying that I also desire all other qualities which help to constitute a successful marriage and a happy home."

CAROL SHERVINGTON, Morgan graduate:

"The chances of getting a husband on the same educational level are slim because it is a rat - race — but then again it depends upon the individual (whether she is an interesting, personality or not).

"Then again there are a certain percentage of career-minded females who don't want to get married.

"In a manner of speaking, yes it will be difficult to find the right mate for me because I'm very particular.

"Even though some of them do have the education, they just aren't the right type of person for me or marriage, period."

UNAWARE OF any "scarcity" of men, educated or not, Morgan June graduate who is Miss Carolyl Dotson, was elected Miss Beaux Arts and is presently modeling and making personal appearances for Schaefer Brewing Co.

Miss Dotson has a steady date with whom she says she "gets along fine" though he has but one year of college.

Admitting differences such as amount of education could present a "ticklish situation" she states:

"The question is, what does college mean when it comes to chance of a marriage working?

"For some persons, college is no help at all. Many who have finished still act like they're still in the 9th grade.

"In some cases, it may be better to marry on your educational level, or, even above. But, it's difficult to say. Actually it depends upon the personality of both people and their various experiences."

Woman assaulted

A 48 - year - old woman was criminally assaulted Monday night at Mondawmin Ave. and Clifton Rd.

The victim told police her assailant came up to her at the bus stop and asked how long it would be before the bus arrived. She said she was grabbed about the mouth and pulled into a neary wooded area and assaulted.

She described her attacker as being a man abut 50 years old.
