First of armed robbery series brings drama into courtroom

There were scores of policemen and spectators in the halls and courtroom on the second floor of the downtown courthouse.

A young woman, said to be the girlfriend of a youthful gunman, wept when he was found guilty of robbery with a deadly weapon.

An East Baltimore couple, who revealed how they were robbed of over $300 last February, was cited by the judge as the most convincing witnesses he had ever heard in his career.

All this happened Tuesday as James Allen Bridges, 21, 1700 block Montpelier St., was found guilty of armed robbery.

And, there's more drama to come as the same witnesses will again appear in the next 30 days.

Judge Joseph Barnes who heard the case, withheld sentence for Bridges stating that the pronouncement will come after he hears the cases of the four other persons said to be involved in the robbery of the couple.

According to Assistant States Attorney Theodore R. McKeldin Jr., who will also prosecute the remaining cases, it will take more than a month to conclude the series of hearings.

The remaining defendants, all in City Jail and charged with robbery with a deadly weapon are:

Ronnie W. Smith, 20, 2400 block Madison Ave.

Edward L. Baker, 25, 2200 block Aisquith St.

Donald W. Ghee, 23, 3000 block Chelsea Terrace

John D. Hatchett, 28, 3000 block Chelsea Terrace.

THE INCIDENT in which "Tiny" or "Fatman" Bridges was charged with armed robbery, occurred Feb. 25, 1965 at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Lee Robinson, 2800 block E. Federal St. and resulted in their loss of $321.

According to testimony, three men came to the Robinson home inquiring about an apartment for rent. All pulled out black pistols and one said, "Give me your money" to Mr. Robinson.

They left the residence after tying up the couple and their 11-year-old daughter and warning them to wait 20 minutes before "making a move."

Mr. and Mrs. Robinson were tied with telephone cords, the daughter, Ellen, with a piece of bed sheet and a tenant, Joseph Fenwick, 24, with Mr. Robinson's trousers belt which one of the robbers took from his waist.

According to Judge Byrnes, Mr. and Mrs. Robinson were the most convincing witnesses he had ever heard. He stated: "In all my career as a jurist, I have never found more impressive witnesses."

The Robinsons identified Bridges from police photographs prior to the trial and pointed him out in the courtroom.

Bridges took the stand in his own defense at the conclusion of the four-hour hearing. He denied he was present at the Robinson's residence at the time of the robbery. He also denied he admitted part in the occurrence in a statement to police.

He said he did not see the statement and only signed "a piece of paper." He was at his mother's at the time of the robbery, he testified.

Mrs. Eva Robinson, 48, the wife, and the daughter, also identified another robbery participant from photos, it was stated, but a third man, who spoke softly, almost in a whisper, wore sunglasses, it was testified.

No bail has been set for Bridges who remains in City Jail.

* * *

OTHER ROBBERIES with which the defendants have also been chaged are

(1) the March 8, 1965 robbery of Willie Newsome outside his tavern in the 2200 block Prentiss Place. Mr. Newsome of the 3900 block Colborne Rd., said he was robbed of $600.

(2) Miss Bettye Massenburg, 3900 block Colborne Rd. robbed of $35, March 6, 1965.

(3) Joseph Preston, 2600 block E. Chase St., tied up on Feb. 24, 1965 and robbed of $300 and a transistor radio.

Unitarian speaker to deal with 'undaunted'

The Rev. John G. MacKinnon, minister of All Souls Unitarian Church in Indianapolis, Indiana, will be the guest minister at this Sunday 11 a.m. service at the First Unitarian Church, Charles and Franklin Sts.

The title of the Rev. Mr. MacKinnon's sermon is: "To Be Undaunted."

He has served with such organizations as the Urban League, the Civil Liberties Union, the NAACP, and the TV panel show, "SCOPE." Mr. MacKinnon has also been a minister in Unitarian Churches in six states.

Cooper - Hughes proposals, redistricting face solons

By MAX JOHNSON
AFRO Annapolis Bureau

ANNAPOLIS — Maryland's General Assembly swings into the first full work week of the current 70 - day session here Monday, with early indications that the Cooper - Hughes recommendations and congressional redistricting will be major issues.

The former, which would channel additional state financial aid to Baltimore and needy political subdivisions, has already been challenged by Gov. J. Millard Tawes.

Revisions now under way must somehow be satisfactory to the governor for passage. He has taken a dim view of the recommendations, fearing they will upset the state's fiscal program.

Another thorn is a group of county legislators, headed by Sen. Frederick C. Malkus Jr. (D. Dorchester), chairman of the powerful Judiciary Committee, still peeved by upcoming loss of power through reapportionment.

They are not inclined at the moment to grant any more concessions, particularly to aid Baltimore's financial plight.

* * *

BY THE same token, chances of passing a congressional redistricting bill to allow Baltimore to retain its three districts appear none too brightat this early stage. What, if anything, of notable substance will come out of this session is unpredictable among key legislators.

This is a final session for many of the members of the Senate and House, cut by reapportionment particularly in the smaller counties, where some leaders see almost anything likely to happen.

It is what Sen. Malkus termed "the last hurrah" for many of them, and some are set to make it an impressive one — one way or another.

* * *

One to lower the voting age to 18; establishment of a procedure for absentee registration of voters; permit abortion, when there is pregnancy resulting from a criminal attack, and several covering increased aid to education and benefits to teachers.

On the House side, there are bills to regulate the sale of pistols; permit divorce based on seven years seperation; a new congressional redistricting bill, which would still give Baltimore two districts; increase the age for motor vehicle operator licensing to 18 years, and one to increase salary of Assembly members to $4,500 a year.

Bills, as in former session, on practically all conceivable subjects, can be expected.

MISS CLAUDIA RAWLES is one of Morgan's four students now working with political leaders in the city as a part of the internership. Her duties are with the City Council and here Miss Helen McDonald, secretary to the City Council, observes her work.

Morgan four in political heartland

Four Morgan State College students, Misses C. Anne Dashiell, Carolyn Jackson, Claudia Rawles, and Charles J. Minor, have accepted internships in the offices of Senator Verda F. Welcome, the Republican Poverty Information Center, the City Council, and the Republican City Committee.

The internships, sponsored by the Institute for Political Education at Morgan State College under a Ford Foundation grant, give students practical experience in political and governmental procedures and problems.

Each of the students assigned as an interne is a graduate scholar of the Institute for Political Education and in addition, each has spent a summer working as an interne at a national level.

As internes, the four students work in their respective offices 15 hours a week in addition to their regular class schedule at the college. Miss Dashiell, Miss Rawle and Mr. Minor are history majors, while Miss Jackson is seeking her degree in sociology.

* * *

THE WORK experience has varied, ranging from preparing packets for the use of Councilmen at their Monday session, to researching topics and drafting speeches. The scope of the work has brought each interne into contact with other city agencies, elected officials, and the public.

All seem to share the sentiments expressed by one of the students: "This job has the definite advantage of placing me right in the heart of Baltimore politics. In short, I'm learning. My eyes and ears are open, and my mouth closed."

The Institute for Political Education at Morgan State College is a project conducted since 1959.

Augustus A. Adair has been named acting director for the 1965 - 66 school year in the absence of Dr. G. James Fleming, director and founder of the Institute, who is on a year's leave of absence.

Reginald Lewis serves as assistant director, and Mrs. E. R. Pierson as staff assistant.
