'Yours to choose the way'

Washingtonian tells AKA's

Speaking at the annual observance of Founders' Day on the 58th anniversary of Alpha Kappa Sorority, Mrs. Esther Pollard of Washington urged her sorors to take stock of resources which can be used for advancement.

Mrs. Pollard is graduate member - at - large of the Sorority.

POINTING out that "we are not caught forever in any error or confusion," Mrs. Pollord said:

"Look at your hand. You can move it as a caress or a fist; to build up or tear down; to give or to take.

"Always, your hand can make a mistake or correct one, or it can do nothing. The decision is yours.

"THIS IS the wonder and the challenge of our lives. For the harsh fact of our lives is how free we are to do nothing; or do the wrong thing to hurt not only others but ourselves.

"Yet the great thing of our lives is how free we are to start again, to find a better path from whatever wrong turn we or our world may have taken."

SOROR POLLARD had been introduced by Soror Elsie Sessoms, basileus of Epsilon Omega chpater which was observing the anniversary. Other participants on the program included a quintet from Alpha Delta, undergraduate chapter, Morgan College, which gave luncheon blessing. the right, under our Bill or Rights, to speak and act freely within the range protected by the Constitution?

"The fact that we are public officials in no way should limit our rights as individuals. Nor should the exercise of our individual rights abridge our opportunity to serve in an office of public trust," the testy statement declared.

Noting that he "has performed his public duties skillfully, fairly, vigorously and responsibly," the commissioners hoped for "appropriate action to restore Mr. Buckler to membership on this Commission."

SAMUEL T. Daniels, executive director of the commission, stated that he was "distressed" this method was used against the commission for doing the very job that was set up for it by City Council.

"If anything," he said, "the commission ought to be commended for being on its toes."

One city councilman had given the real reason for Mr. Buckler's ouster Monday night —"He's too liberal," Leon Rubenstein (D., 5th), said —and as the commission moved on to its regular business, it gave supporting evidence to Mr. Rubenstine's statement.

As its first action, CRC voted to approve in principle a recommendation from the Baltimore Teachers Union to the School Board for the adoption of a Diversified Services Curriculum to train youngsters in skilled and semi - skilled jobs.

It also gave approval to a move for increased cooperation between the local unit and its counterpart Human Relations Commissions in Anne Arundel and Baltimore counties.

Other reports noted that action on a non - discrimination clause in city purchasing contracts would be forthcoming from the City solicitor within a few weeks and that CRC will publish its annual report on its activities on Feb. 7.

A copy of the commission's survey of placement and distribution of teachers in the public schools — Made at Mayor McKeldin's request —will be presented to the mayor Monday.

Other employment surveys are presently underway regarding banks, retail stores, labor unions, non - public specialized schools and the city as a whole, it was reported.

Reporting on studies of five Catholic hospitals, the commission found few colored doctors and key personnel and has scheduled further meetings with administrators to urge broad - base recruitment of personnel.

REPORTS DETAILED the formation of a community council in the Alameda -Harford - Waverly area and stressed the need for one in Southwest Baltimore, near lower Hilton St.

Progress was noted in the Career Development Program and in the proposal for the Inner City Project, which will be presented to the major next week, Mr. Daniels said.

Meeting four times in the last month, the Mayor's Emergency Anti - Blight Committee has seen to over 600 inspections by the Bureau of the Building Inspections, worked with the Health Department's Rodent Control proposal, heard an account of the AFRO's Clean Block Campaign and proposed an ordinance which would allow for more Sanitation Department service in certain sections of the city, CRC officials announced.

in all residential areas.

Glenn spoke of the possibility of prompt action in the elimination of nuisances by the use of existing codes such as fire, health and building regulations.

The irate women, once a group few in number, rallied an audience of nearly 30 persons who assembled in the Center of the anti - poverty agency at 1809 Ashland Ave., to hear the Mayor reply to their protest.

Mr. McKeldin's emssspoke of an ordinance banning horses on City Streets to come into effect in 1968, a a long - range answer to the problem; however, promise was made to continue ways to find immediate remedies to the complaints raised in the protest.

Following the Mayor's commitment to "do the utmost," the women announced their determination to continue to find ways to get rid of their horsey problem and expressed appreciation for the support coming from City Hall.

"WE ARE all poor people who live in poverty area of necessity," said one. "We will do anything necesary to make our area livable."

The fight to close the stables was joined in by the Maryland Anti - Vivisection Society, whose president, William Snyder, urged the group to call on their city councilmen for support.

Snyder also advised the committee to insist that all present laws governing both horses and tables be fully enforced.

"Enforcement, he said "is a matter for the police and other city departments, however, it is the citizens who must point out violations leading to prosecutions.

Robert Cain, a student in the University of Maryland's School of Social Work, is giving his service to the protest.

On the matter of stables, horses and wagons, Mr. Cain said, "I am convinced that they are out of place in our modern city.

"The problems that are caused," he went on, "concern health, sanitation, traffic hazards on busy streets obstruction of small streets, especially where wagons are stored and loaded for the day's use.

ALSO OF concern is the effect of stables on residential areas in which they are located, creating at best an undesirable atmosphere within which to live."

The student worker indicated a responsibility for helping the men in this type of junkers, to "develop and maintain new roles as productive citizen."

Mrs. Johnson, the committees head, brought attention to an unsigned 'hate letter' which she received through the mails—following newspaper accounts of her efforts.

The insulting letter said Mrs. Johnson must be from the south and "why didn't you stay down there with the KKK. They would bomb you if you did that to them.'

"If I had my way," it went on, "I would send all of you back down there . . . "

Said Mr. Johnson, "To get such a letter as this from some unsigned coward, we must be doing some thing."

To this all the ladies agreed —and they agreed again that stables and horses must go.

law, why can't you?" one man asked the captain.

He explained that evidence seized through a search with an illegal warrant was not admissible as court evidence.

The audience had difficulty understanding that "even if you catch someone with dope on him," that does not automatically prove he is guilty.

Stating, in response to a question, that "pep pills are pretty much in all the high schools to a certain extent," Capt. Carroll gave one instance of a novel way to get around the search and seizure laws.

At one school, he said, the principal called him in and at the same time had a student brought to his office. The principal told the student to empty his pockets and out came a proliferation of pep pills.

"Now lock him up," the principal told Carroll, "I want to make an example of him."

"IN THIS case the search by the principal was legal," Carroll said, and the conviction stuck. "He could not take an illegal search against the principal as he could against a police officer.

"But it would not have been legal if the principal had asked the search at my direction."

Carroll lamented the fact that "a lot of principals don't want their schools to get a bad name," and as a result much pep pill trouble is not reported.

But in this particular school the student arrested was the main source, and through the principal's strong stand, he has had less trouble than in other schools Carroll said.

OTHER questions dealt with cure and detection.

Even if an addict has been in jail for five years, the captain said, 99 out of a hundred will go back on dope.

"We can cure them of the habit in a month, but we can't cure them up here," he said, tapping his head.

He dismissed any solution, such as that used in Great Britain, which supplies free drugs to addicts, as only leading to increased addiction.

He said any behavior change in a youngster, such as glassy eyes, incoherence or stupor, should lead adults to suspect pep pills as a cause and that the best step to take is to alert the Narcotics Squad.

"We get most of our leads from parents," he noted.

torneys and attorneys for the state must present their arguments before him then.

Present at this hearing will be the Veneys' attorneys, John R. Hargrove and Daniel Klein Jr. and prosecutors for the state, State's Attorney Charles Moylan Jr., deputy George Helenski and assistant attorney's Frank De Costa Jr. and John Lewin.

MEANTIME, while Earl and Samuel Veney remain in separate cells in City Jail, many problems are cropping up due to the out-of-town hearing that may last 30 days or more.

The 100-mile a day trip for the brothers and 30 witnesses requires serious thought.

Questions now pondered by security forces are:

1) Whether to transport the Veneys, guards, witnesses and law enforcement agents back and forth each day or lock them there in Frederick;

Or 2) whether to lock the prisoners in the nearest state police barracks for the duration of the trial;

3) how to perform the task without too much public attention.

tem is necessary for protection of the private property rights often alluded to by opponents of fair housing legislation.

The Democratic councilmen were called unreceptive to the needs of the people of Baltimore.

The Young Republicans also came out in full support of Maryland's proposed ETV (educational television) legislation. A resolution, introduced by George Martin, local school teacher, called for immediate adoption of the plan. It also urged that the program be made operational as soon as possible.

—Morgan budget

appropriation for the current fiscal year of $5,142,192.

Of this increase, $109,121 is in the all-important category of general funds, with a proposed $3,383,176 over the current $3,104,055.

The college had requested $3,633,830 in general funds, or $250,654 more than the recommended $3,383,176.

Gov. Tawes recommended 29 new positions at Morgan, but Dr. Jenkins had requested 49.

Of the 29 new positions, 20 are proposed new faculty posts. The college president had asked for 27 such new positions.

THE TAWES recommendations are for nine staff positions, while Dr. Jenkins had requested 22 additional personnel.

In other budget categories, the college had asked for $1,666, 284 in special funds and the Tawes recommendations are for $1,665,328.

In Federal funds, the request was for $905,022, and the recommendation totals $909,697.

The new faculty positions recommended include 18 for regular instructional program, and two for the graduate program to allow the college to sustain the anticipated enrollment increase.

The nine staff positions recommended are a key punch operator in the data processing division; a clerk-typist 2 in the business office; four secretarty I position to provide clerical support for the faculty; a senior account clerk in the book store, a security officer, and an assistant to director of student activities.
