Rehabilitation in Watts moves slowly, officials, citizens grope for solutions

LOS ANGELES (UPI)— Six months have passed since the night of Aug. 11 when a routine traffic arrest triggered the worst colored rioting in the nation's history.

Today, the city, state and citizens of Watts, in South Los Angeles, still are groping for solutions to the problems which caused the unprecedented chaos. Rehabilitation has been painfully slow. One anti-poverty worker charged practically nothing has been done.

Since the end of the six-day Watts riots, more than 2,000 persons involved have been convicted of crimes ranging from trespassing to arson.

But some of the worst offenders who participated in the fiery turmoil were never caught.

* * *

THAT IS the opinion of J. Miller Leavy, chief trial deputy of the Los Angeles County District Attorney's Office. He released statistics on nearly 4,000 court cases showing 2,006 adult convictions and another 534 cases handled in juvenile courts.

Leavy, trying to put the staggering arrest and conviction total in perspective, stressed most defendants were taken into custody after the National Guard and police finally won at least limited control of the curfew area.

"Some of the principal offenders were able to get away without being apprehended because police were unable to compete with them," Leavy said.

One prosecutor conceded that many of those arrested were "victims of circumstance" or those caught up in a mob psychology in which they grabbed a can of meat, bottle of liquor or some other object in a market or store.

Of 3,960 individual defendants, 3,779 cases were processed by Jan. 31. Only a relative handful remain to be disposed of.

As an example of innocent persons among the more than 700 whose cases were dismissed, a prosecutor cited a rehabilitated ex - convict. The man had to go through the riot area, but feared for his safety and placed a gun in his glove compartment. But National Guardsmen stopped his car, and arrested him.

The District Attorney's Office dismissed the charge.

* * *

IN CONTRAST to this, there were the cases of the offenders who were arrested for serious acts. One of 398 felony convictions involved Robert Ernest Pegues, who was found guilty of arson.

Pegues was convicted on testimony of witnesses who said he set fire to a building. The fire spread, leveling an entire block — including the apartment house where he had tried to talk friends into joining him in setting a fire, according to the district attorney.

An angry informer helped police track Pegues down. Since his conviction, the district attorney said, he has fled to Louisiana.

The statistics tell a partial story of those who were formally charged. Of 2,160 cases disposed of in superior court by Jan. 31, the county obtained 1,240 convictions — 398 for felonies. Another 555 cases were dismissed before arraignment and 87 at the time of arraignment. Trials were conducted for 1,516, and 246 innocent verdicts returned.

* * *

IN ALMOST all cases, the charges against defendants were reduced, prosecutors said, for lack of evidence or because of circumstances.

Municipal courts handled 1,085 cases, with 766 convicting system for school desegregation plans.

Legal experts to check on the validity of school board desegregation plans if there is doubt they will be effective.

The office of education should reject free choice plan where there is evidence of intimidation, or where the plans fails to provide assurance that school authorities will discipline students who harass colored students.

Wac Johnson cited for return of apparatus

Maureen Johnson, WAC private, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Johnson, 2120 Bolton St., has been commended in "The Stethoscope", post newspaper at Fitzsimons Base General Hospital in Denver, Colo., where Miss Johnson is stationed.

The commendation was due to her retrieving a special fire hose nozzle which had been left in the path of Pfc Johnson's car recently.

Without hesitation, Private Johnson decided upon the origin of the expensive piece of apparatus and returned it to the nearest fire department station.

Prior to enlistment in March, 1965, Pfc Johnson graduated from Douglass High and attended Coppin State and Morgan State colleges studying physical education.

She is a member of Douglass Memorial Church and was an active painter and enjoyed roller skating and working on automobiles as a hobby.

* * *

PRIVATE JOHNSON had actually tried to enlist when she was 19 but did not pass one of the tests. "Last year the Army decided to waive the test in view of her record," Mrs. Johnson told the APRO.

Her parents, and uncle Richard Johnson, and her niece, Audrey Johnson, are anxiously awaiting Private Johnson's next 12 - day leave on Feb. 20.

She is currently a technician in the Fitzsimons General Hospital Medical Corps unit working in physical therapy.

Dixie school mixing seen 'more fiction than fact'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Civil Rights Commission said Tuesday that school desegregation in the South was being slowed by compliance plans that were more fiction than fact and colored students too frightened to go to the school of their choice.

To change this, the Commission urged the Office of Education to tighten its supervision of freedom of choice plans used by most Southern school districts. It also urged Congress to enact a law to prevent harassment of colored people who try to take advantage of plans approved by the Office of Education.

In a report to President Johnson, the Commission noted that there was a "large increase in the number of school districts beginning desegregation" in 1965. But it said not more than one colored child out of every 13 actually attends school with white children in the deep South.

* * *

THE BASIC reason for this, the Cimmission said was the freedom of choice school plan which allows a student to attend any school in his district, or in a geographical area.

The plan has not "dis-established the dual racially segregated school systems," the commission report said.

In some cases, the report said school districts have filed desegregation plans with the Office of Education, but are not complying with them.

In other cases, the commission said the office of education accepted compliance plans that do not meet the requirements set up by the agency to enforce Title VI of the Civil Rights Act. This section of the law allows the Office of Education to withhold federal funds to schools not complying with desegregation orders.

* * *

ACCORDING TO the commission, the office of education had neither an adequate staff or procedures set up to see that the school districts were actually carrying out their plans.

"Efforts of the office of education to mother compliance were largely limited to investigations of complaints filed," the report said.

In actual fact, the commission said, "the free choice idea is not benefitting the colored, but rather reinforcing the dual school system.

"A substantial factor in the reluctance of colored parents and children to select white schools is fear," the commission said.

The fear is not only of physical violence, but also of economic retaliation, the report said. It cited instances where colored citizens lost jobs and homes while trying to take advantage of the freedom of choice school plan.

* * *

TO CORRECT this, the commission recommended that congress enact a bill allowing either the Attorney General or the victim to bring a civil suit to prevent "private persons from harassing" colored parents who try to use school desegregation plans approved by the office of education.

Other commission recommendations included:

An adequately-run monitorial system in supplying jobs and training the unskilled workers.

* * *

SOME STEPS have been taken, and more are coming. Gov. Edmund G. Brown asked the Legislature to approve a $61.5 million program for south Los Angeles, including $12 million in state aid to reduce school class size to a maximum of 25 students in disadvantaged areas. Another $7.1 million program is aimed at more jobs, coupled with training.

Police have adopted an Inspector General System to air complaints from those charging brutality or mistreatment. A City Human Rights Commission, also recommended by the McCone Commission, has won tentative approval.

But almost day - to - day debate continues on how to solve the unemployment and education problems, with some indication the debate may have ramifications in the 1966 statewide elections.
