INTRODUCTION

The Sarah D. Griffen, Clyde Griffen, and Margaret Thibault Collection of the Goldsborough Family Papers (SC2085) on deposit at the Maryland State Archives consists of 18,721 documents of that important Talbot County family from the Myrtle Grove estate. The collection includes material from as early as 1654 and as late as 1954. The majority of the papers relate to the nineteenth century during which Robert Henry Goldsborough (1779-1836) was a United States Senator, and when his son William (1802-1876) held the largest family estates.

The materials cover all aspects of this family's life. A great proportion deals with the business of farming their extensive landholdings. There are numerous personal and corporate financial papers. Political correspondence, speeches, and legislative records survive in the papers of Senator Goldsborough. Land and court records for the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries can be found among the family documents, as well as the papers of Robert H. Goldsborough's lawyer, Nicholas Hammond. Many plats, warrants, and patents for the family's land, and for many other tracts exist in this collection. Wills and estate inventories for the Goldsboroughs, their relatives, and their clients are available from the late 1600s through the twentieth century. The personal affairs of various members of the family can be seen in correspondence, educational documents, collections of poetry, and a few diaries and daybooks. Lastly, the collection is full of genealogical research, family trees, and inquiries concerning all branches of the Goldsborough family, their ancestors, descendants, and in-laws.

The family's business papers include extensive records from their farming endeavors. Crop production and sales can be traced for each estate (Myrtle Grove, Cottingham, New House, and Ashby) from around 1802-1890. Other records from these properties reveal the day-to-day farming operation of the Goldsboroughs and their tenants. Receipts for material and services constitute a large portion of the collection. Papers relating to the marketing of the produce show the relationship of commission merchants, purchasing agents, shippers, factors, and the farmers themselves. The numerous papers from the estate of planter Colonel Robert Lloyd Nichols, Robert H. Goldsborough's father-in-law, reinforce the materials from the Goldsborough properties. The farm business records also deal extensively with slaves, showing transactions, listing persons, and including many letters concerning runaways and their recapture.

Farming was only one aspect of the Goldsboroughs' business. William Goldsborough speculated in land as far away as Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Robert and William both invested in railroads and canals in Maryland. The corporate records of insurance companies, one personally owned retail corporation, and financial ventures in which the family invested are found in this collection. The banking and credit accounts of all the major figures of the family can be analyzed through account books, promissory notes, and bank records.

Among the Goldsborough Papers are legal documents of Robert H. Goldsborough's lawyer, Nicholas Hammond. Hammond's legal papers from the early nineteenth century include court records, land surveys, and depositions for cases involving land disputes, business contracts, plus occasional criminal matters. Warrants, patents, and surveys make up most of these legal papers, some dating back to 1650. Depositions are also numerous. Of particular interest is Hammond's legal correspondence which includes letters from Charles Carroll of Carrollton and other prominent Marylanders.

An important selection from this collection is the political papers of Senator Goldsborough. These documents range from official United States Congressional records to private notes, drafts of speeches, and personal letters. There is a strong Whig sentiment in these documents, and an equally forceful anti-Jacksonian view. Letters include those to and from Maryland governors, residents, and notable figures of that era, such as Henry Clay, Samuel Smith, Rufus King, and David Porter. Maryland political documents also appear among the national issues. While many letters refer to internal improvement, others are concerned with the local reaction to Nat Turner's slave rebellion in 1831, and to local applications of Federal policy, such as Post Office assignments.

Robert H. Goldsborough's papers contain many references to material culture as well as politics. There is a wealth of information on the estates and possessions of many individuals in the form of wills and estate inventories. The estate of Colonel Robert Lloyd Nichols, who died about 1825, is most fully documented because Robert H. Goldsborough was the estate administrator for his deceased father-in-law. The large planters are not the only ones documented through their wills. Various Goldsborough tenants, ancestors, and Hammond clients are included.

The wills tie in with the great volume of genealogical research and documentation found in this collection. Charles Goldsborough (1865-1925) made claims on an English estate and had done much to trace his line back to the Yerbury family in England. Because marital relationships tied the Goldsboroughs to the Tilghman, Nichols, and Chamberlaine families (among others), much can be learned about these families' genealogy as well.

The Goldsborough Papers also include some unusual or significant items that deserve special mention. There are several newspapers among the files, including issues of the "Easton Gazette". The most notable newspaper was a 1904 edition of the Utica, New York publication "The Globe" which covered Baltimore's Great Fire. There are more than twenty clippings from Civil War era newspapers that relate to the letters of Robert Goldsborough who served as a lieutenant in the Confederate Army, was captured and imprisoned on Johnson's Island. His nephew Charles Goldsborough was a civil engineer for several railroads in the late nineteenth century. His field notes, correspondence, and manuals about engineering procedures of railroads are very informative. Charles' records of the sale of the family library at Myrtle Grove includes an invaluable catalogue of literature owned by the family. Lastly, some papers from the Tilghman family are scattered throughout the Goldsborough Papers.

The Goldsborough Papers are an excellent source for several kinds of studies. Agriculture in the nineteenth century is one topic addressed most fully in these papers. Insightful glimpses of Jacksonian political opposition, Congressional operations, and the effects of national politics on local Maryland activities can be gleaned from the Senator's documents. Land records, and the legal disputes growing out of those records, especially for the eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries, can be analyzed. Slavery can be studied through the inventories, correspondence, and records of sale, runaways, or captures. The Goldsborough Papers reveals so many aspects of a family, both personal and public, over several generations, making the papers useful to studies from the revolutionary era to the twentieth century.

Other related materials at the Maryland State Archives include the Mrs. John F. Donoho Collection of Nicholas Hammond's legal papers (MSA SC 906) and the same donor's catalogue of Goldsborough papers as well as ledgers from Robert Goldsborough (MSA SC 875). The Collections of Patricia C. Goldsborough and Mrs. Robert Henry (MSA SC 542 and MSA SC 652, respectively) contain some family bibles and records from others. Micro-filmed documents related to the Goldsboroughs can be found in MSA SCM 1338, the originals of which are part of the Griffen-Thibault Collection.

The Maryland State Archives elected to apply an innovative processing method of preserving and cataloguing the materials in Sarah D. Griffen, Clyde Griffen, and Margaret Thibault Collection of Goldsborough Family Papers. When faced with a large amount of material, the folder-level cataloguing system can provide a detailed description in much less time than conventional wholesale physical sorting and item-by-item inventories. Combining physical preservation techniques and computer database cataloguing, a collection of documents can be both safely stored and readily accessible to researchers.

Dr. Edward C. Papenfuse, the Maryland State Archivist, developed the folder-level inventory system with the assistance of Josh Civin, Lauren Marcus, Todd Kosmerick, and R.J. Rockefeller. Each item in a collection, in the order it is found, is separately smoothed, cleaned, numbered (starting anew with each folder), and then stored, several to each acid-free folder within an archival document storage box. Each folder and box is filled to prevent the documents from sagging. By keeping the documents in the order in which they were discovered, and by using the database to locate particular items, there is no need for time consuming chronological or topical physical reorganization of the materials (the numbering system reflects the box, folder, and the item's order in the folder). A computer database entry is made for each folder indicating the dates of the materials within, their character, and making references to items of particular note or importance. The net result is that the computer index file permits a variety of approaches to the material. Topics, individuals, or time frames can all be isolated in the database which gives reference to the location of the original documents. This folder-level method of cataloguing provides a basis for additional detailed work with the documents, including microfilm, scanned imaging of the documents, or an eventual item-by-item inventory.

The folder level analysis was not the only work done on the Goldsborough Papers. The donors' family members' work on the materials included a numbering system of their own and many valuable transcriptions. The family cataloguing numbers appear in a database field, while the transcripts are on file, cross-referenced with the original documents. At the Maryland State Archives, Lauren Marcus and Josh Civin began processing of the Goldsborough Papers under Dr. Papenfuse's direction. The team prepared, examined and stored each document. Items with special preservation requirements were brought to the Conservation Laboratory's attention. Oversized boxes contain larger items. The relation between such items and those among which they were found was recorded. In this way, as with the placement of all the documents, any possible relationship from physical proximity is preserved. The interns alternated processing with data-entry and descriptive writing. R.J. Rockefeller, a graduate student at the University of Maryland, took over the project when the original interns returned to school. He standardized the phrases used in both the folder level description and the particular subject fields, editing both his own work and that of his predecessors. While there is an arbitrary element in the selection of terms or of items to be highlighted individually, the descriptions provide easy and complete research access to the materials.

The guides to the collection exist in three forms. The first is this printed inventory. The index of the text from this inventory is available in a WordCruncher™ computer file. Lastly, the information herein is also available in a dBase IV™ file.
