Workshop covers job opportunities

The Federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, created by the Civil Rights Act of 1964, in the eight months of its existence has been flooded with nearly three times as many cases as was anticipated in its budget.

This insight, and others, into the work of the commission was given Wednesday afternoon by its Director of Liaison, Ben D. Segal, in a workshop devoted to Federal, state and local responsibilities under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act.

The afternoon workshop, sponsored by the Maryland Interracial Commission and the Baltimore Community Relations Commission, attracted 50 business and labor leaders to the State Office Building.

Citing the effects that the commission is trying to eradicate, Mr. Segal pointed to the fact that "heavy unemployment among non-whites is at least twice as high — causes and part among whites," and especially "serious" is the high unemployment rate of 25 percent among colored youth.

FURTHER PROBLEMS effects he said are the growing concentration of colored people in run - down central cities and segregated schools and segregated education.

As an example of the results of unemployment, poverty and segregated education, Segal pointed to Watts, where "two thirds of the adults have less than a high school education and one in every eight is illiterate."

He noted the irony of the situation in which "we hear about the growing shortages of skilled workers," and on the other hand unemployment and under employment in minority communities.

To achieve "any significant breakthrough in employment opportunities," Segal said, "we are going to have to effect major breakthroughs in improving the education that the colored youngster is receiving."

Not only does the commission handle discrimination cases, Segal declared, but also seeks to open up job opportunities in larger numbers.

Is this latter function, the commission has to convince industries and unions that traditional personnel practices are not enough.

* * *

SINCE THE task is so large — "there is more work to be done . . . than the EEOC and all of the state and local agencies combined can do" — Segal said the problem becomes one of maximum coordination of state, federal and local agencies.

The need for coordination was illustrated at the workshop as representatives of the local (Community Relations Commission), State and the Federal agencies (Interracial Commission) and the Federal agencies outlined their methods for dealing with complaints.

Samuel T. Daniels, executive director of CRC, said a complaint of discrimination must be filed with his office within 30 days after the act.

State investigator Barry Greenstein said, for the state to act, complaints must be filed within 90 days.

The federal agency is more lenient.

Complaints may be filed with all three agencies, and are frequently referred from one to the other for action.

Settlement of complaints is mostly through conciliation and voluntary action, the panelists agreed. Courts are used only as a last resort.

In response to questions from union leaders, Greenstein, Daniels and the Rev. Herbert Edwards, executive secretary of the State Interracial Commission, assured them that complaints are always urged to seek redress within existing organizations such as unions.

The state and federal Fair Employment Practice Laws presently cover businesses and labor unions with 100 or more workers. Each July this number will be reduced by 25 until it reaches 25 in 1968.

The local law covers smaller businesses.

How come?
Young George Hartford thought the price of baking powder was too high.
So he hired a chemist, made his own... the very best... and sold it at an unheard of low price.
That was in the 1880's.
That was the first step in developing what today is a long and respected line of manufactured products.
And every one is produced with just one thought.
To give you the very best for the least amount of money.
Can you be sure they're the very best?
We guarantee it...without question.
