God is dead

tablish certain religious values which could be acted on by all Christians without worrying about the troublesome question of whether there is a God or not.

He cited the positions of three of the leaders of the movement —Dr. Thomas J. J. Altizer, of Emory University in Atlanta; Dr. Paul Van Buren, of Temple University in Philadelphia, and Dr. William Hamilton, of the Colgate Rochester (N.Y.) Divinity School.

Dr. Altizer, he said, stresses that since there is no scientific proof of God, many can not bring themselves to believe in His existence.

Therefore, Dr. Altizer feels it is better to do without Him and try to restore a sense that certain things in society are sacred, and have a special social value beyond the material, Dr. McKinney said.

• • •

DR. VAN BUREN'S view, according to Dr. McKinney, is that man should concentrate on Jesus, who is an historical personage, and try to live up to his values.

Dr. Hamilton's idea is to keep away from "theological niceties" — such as the problem of God's existence — and go out and practice Christian values in the world, especially in regard to the underprivileged.

Dr. Hamilton urges Christians to "get involved" and to recognize the "moral centrality of the colored Revolution," Dr. McKinney said.

• • •

DR. McKINNEY concluded that we should be "grateful" for the "God is Dead" Movement.

"Whenever there is a challenge to the accepted, taken-for-granted notions, we are called upon to think about what we do believe. The answer will have to come out of our deevest insights."

Dr. McKinney was introduced by the program chairman of the meeting, retired Methodist Bishop Edgar A. Love.
