

Donald Gaines Murray

Baltimore, Md.

A MAN from the metropolis of one of the border states (Baltimore), Donald came to the "fairest college" with some but not much of the leisure that distinguishes "ye gentleman from the South". This man is in very truth a paradox of leisure and activity. We marvel at his attendance of the cinema one week, and assiduous study the next week. An adaptability of the maxim "All work and no play" seems to be his forte. However the results of his study are slowly bearing fruit. (He gets no D's now.) We have heard that Donald harbors secret literary and athletic aspirations, (witness Poetry Society attempts and candidacy for Varsity Track and Swimming). Alas, we have here a human frailty—but perhaps he may be rescued from this. His interest in Greek and things Greek is still the prime enigma. But perhaps we are right in deducing that it shows remarkable potentialities to varied fields.
