NAACP Baby rally at Sharp Street Sun.

The NAACP Annual Baby Contest is being held Sunday, June 5 at 2 p.m. at Sharp Street Memorial Methodist Church, Dolphin and Etting Sts.

Nearly 50 babies have been entered to compete for valuable prizes and awards given for the highest reports. All contestants will be given special certificates.

The contest is for the benefit of the organization's continued fight in the courts for equal rights.

According to the president, Dr. Lillie M. Jackson, it is noteworthy that funds from the yearly event give great assurance that today's children will have a better city, state and nation in which to live.

A program planned for the event begins at 2 p.m. All reports should be in at the church by 1:30 p.m.

Mrs. Juanita J. Mitchell and Mrs. E. Hawkins, chairman will make the awards.

* * *

A SPECIAL feature of the program will be musical selections by the Richard C. Richardson Choral Group; The Sharp Street Open Hearts with Mrs. Maggie Bailey, director; and soloists, Velda and Ronnie Smith, duet.

Also featured are soloists, Carolyn Murphy, Catonsville; Carolyn Hall, Sharp Street organist; Lyn Muldrow, Morning Star Baptist Church.

* * *

MISS CHARI AVERY of Sharp Street will give the welcome address with Miss Charmaine Y. Logan, Wayland Baptist Church, responding.

Clarence Mitchell IV will give a reading.

The Rev. Howard L. Cornish, chairman of Ways and Means, will extend greetings. The address to the mothers on the value of the ballot will be given by Mrs. Mary B. Adams, director of the Baltimore Volunteer Service Corps.

Dr. John Tilley, director of the NAACP Register and Vote Campaign, will speak on "What the NAACP Has Done".

Others on the program are Wanda Wiggins, Providence Baptist Church and Bernard Barber, Morning Star Baptist Church.

Other contest officials are Mesdames Edith Allen, Susie Murphy, Eula Mae Watts, Bessie Wood, Ida Russell, chairman and assistant chairman: Dora Caldwell, member.

The Rev. Marcus G. Wood is also a co-chairman and Dr. Charles Watts, treasurer.

The Faculty at Work

DR. MARTIN D. JENKINS
President

These Annual Reports have as their purpose acquainting the public with various aspects of the program of . . .

1966 PRESIDENT'S REPORT
To the Alumni, Friends and Citizens of Maryland

MORGAN STATE COLLEGE

This year's report is devoted to the Faculty.

The primary elements of a college as an institution of higher education are its students, its buildings and equipment, and its faculty. Each of these elements is indispensable and in the effective college each is of high level.

In this Report, I describe the activities of our teachers so that the public and prospective students may gain an understanding of their work and an appreciation of their vital contribution to our total educational program.

What Are The Duties And Responsibilities Of Faculty Members?

Of course they teach! This is their central task. And to do this task well, superlatively well, is the goal of every worthwhile teacher.

People who are only casually familiar with the work of the college teacher may regard the 12 or 15 hours a week he spends in classroom teaching as an extremely light work load. Closer examination, though, will reveal that the load of the college professor is much heavier than most people realize. No 40-hour week week for him!

The duties of instructors include: classroom teaching, preparation of lectures and classroom activities, marking papers, counseling with students, reading professional literature, serving on faculty and departmental committees, directing extra-curricular activities, representing the college at local, state and national meetings, and doing research or creative work. Chairmen of departments, in addition, supervise instruction and carry on numerous administrative tasks. It is estimated that the average teacher spends 60-65 hours per week in the discharge of these duties!

Excellent Academic Preparation

Morgan State College has an exceptionally competent faculty which, in terms of academic background, teaching proficiency and scholarly interests, compares favorably with that of other American institutions of higher education. The 220 members of our full-time faculty reflect a rich and educational background. Seventy-five faculty members—about 35 per cent—hold the doctoral degree. With few exceptions, all other faculty members not only hold the master's degree but have done considerable work above this level. This rich background of formal education is one of the factors contributing to the excellence of our faculty.

The faculty, incidentally, is both interracial and international.

Superior Teaching

Teaching in the modern sense means directing the development of students. The process involves much more than simply lecturing or telling. It challenges the teacher to organize the classroom and laboratory situation so that the student is the center of the learning process. It frequently involves the use of the community as an educational laboratory.

Superior teaching at the college is supplemented by numerous unique curricular adaptations and well-equipped laboratories and classrooms.

The interest of our students in excellent teaching is indicated by the annual selection of the Teacher-of-the-Year jointly by the Student Government and the General Alumni Association. During the past four years the following faculty members have been chosen for this honor: Dr. Benjamin A. Quarles, Professor of History; Dr. Ulysses G. Lee, Professor of English; Dr. J. Haywood Harrison, Associate Professor of Education; and Mr. Harry L. Jones, Assistant Professor of English.

Research And Creative Work

One of the characteristics of the superior college faculty member is the desire to explore some of the unsolved problems or to do creative work in his field of specialization. The Morgan State faculty has an outstanding record in this area. In addition to a large number of unpublished institutional studies and an occasional book, about 35 articles by our faculty members appear annually in leading professional journals. In addition, a number of teachers read papers at the meetings of national societies, serve as consultants and experts in their fields of specialization and as officers in professional societies.

Interest In The Total Development Of Students

Teachers at Morgan State College are interested in students as individuals. Every teacher spends many, many hours during the course of the year in face-to-face conferences with individual students. Seventeen staff members—the Deans and Assistant Deans of Men and Women, the Director of Student Personnel, the Assistant Dean of the College, the Director of Admissions and Placement and the Counseling Staff—spend the major part of their time in counseling with students concerning a variety of academic and personal problems.

More than half of our faculty participate in the direction and supervision of student activities. The excellent work of the choir and band, the drama groups, the athletic teams, the student publications, the departmental subject clubs, to mention only a few of the activities, results in large measure from the many hours of hard work by dedicated faculty members.

Interest in the Community

Morgan State College faculty members are making important contributions to city, state, national and international affairs. They serve as board and commission members, officers of professional organizations, and consultants in government, schools and other areas. They address groups, give recitals and participate in art exhibitions. They are officers and members in religious, civic and community organizations. It is noteworthy that more than 90 per cent of our faculty are members of the NAACP and that all who are Maryland citizens are registered voters. These community services have eliminated the traditional barrier between "town and gown."

The Effective Teacher

The effective institution must have teachers who believe in the potential of their students to attain satisfactory norms of performance rather than those who decry their alleged incompetence; teachers who have the ability to motivate students and lift their levels of aspiration rather than those who rely chiefly on grades to stimulate achievement; teachers who lead their students to think rather than simply to memorize or regurgitate the factual content of the text or lecture; teachers who have sympathetic insights of the needs of individual students rather than those who disregard individual differences and their causes; teachers who understand the goals of the total college experience rather than those who seek merely to attain the objectives of narrow subject matter areas; teachers who can develop the creative imagination of students and who themselves utilize creative imagination in the solution of problems; teachers who in their behavior and manifested interests reveal to students the characteristics of a liberally educated person. Knowledge of subject matter fields and the holding of advanced degrees, while important, are in themselves simply not sufficient.

So This Is The Faculty At Work

All of these activities I have described are carried on primarily to create an educational environment conducive to the optimum development of our students so that they may have full opportunity to prepare themselves for constructive service to our state and nation.

The Graduate Program

A graduate program primarily for elementary and secondary teachers was inaugurated in September 1964. Curricula leading to the master's degree are offered in English, History, Social Science and Elementary Education. Individual courses in the new Mathematics for secondary teachers, Reading and other subjects, are also available. An optional pattern of courses to prepare teachers for work with culturally disadvantaged pupils is a special feature of the graduate program. Graduate curricula, supported by Federal funds, are also offered in Mathematics and Science.

Graduate courses are offered chiefly in the late afternoons, evenings, Saturdays and during the summer. Financial aid is available for applicants with superior records.
