native of Mississippi, who had voted for the first time in Tuesday's primary election, who did not bother to read about the resolutions made in the air-conditioned conference room at the much publicized White House conference to —"Fulfill These Rights" and who was walking on a hot road through the swamps and cow pastures of northwestern Mississippi, glared back.

"If we have to march all the way to Jackson — and from there to Kingdom Come I'm marching. 'Cause I stop marching I'm liable to do something else," Mrs. Jones said, her voice almost cracking under the blistering heat of sun and emotion.

Her mood of anger and frustration was the dominant one among the marchers, mostly Mississippians. It was a marked difference from the festive air of the Selma-Montgomery, Ala. march of last year and the carnival approach to the March on Washington in 1963 in more than merely the number of participants or distance.

THE DIFFERENCE showed and the grim expressions which greeted the white motorists who drove perilously close to the column, and in their measured reaction to state troopers who herded them to the shoulders of the road.

Sometime the group would break out in song. But mostly they trudged along quietly in the sweltering sun, as if each were seeking the relief of emotions through the relentless beat of a firm tread.

"If they shoot one, they'll have to shoot us all," one short chesty man spoke softly eyeing the white spectators who were bunched along the route oddly quiet and stoic.

IT WAS reported that a Deacon for Defense and Justice chieftian, Ernest Thomas of Jonesville, La. had raised the question of carrying arms on the march at a closed meeting but had been emphatically voted down.

Thomas promised to participate in the march without arms. There were no weapons in sight.

Dr. King and the other march leaders were obviously cheered by the clusters of spectators who lined the route many of whom joined the march.

Some of them joined immediately as the column came abreast. Others, standing in the yards of weathered single story homes or waiting on top of cars and pickup trucks hesitated and then rushed to join the rank at the call: "Come on, come on, this is your march!"

CARMICHAEL IN customary blue shirt and jeans later said: "As long as people are getting shot on Mississippi roads its futile to talk about what colored Americans can do to help himself.

"That is unless you give him guns and ammunition and tell him to shoot back," he declared.

Batesville," the county seat of Panola.

ABOUT HALF a dozen whites were in the line of march Thursday, estimated by an FBI Agent to contain 300-350 persons. Only about 150 walked with King Wednesday.

Joining the march Thursday were James Farmer, former head of CORE and now directro of the private Center for Community Action Education, and the Rev. Ralph Abernathy, King's chief lieutenant.

King told the marchers, who waited two hours for him in a broiling sun just outside Senatobia, that he was late because of a last-minute strategy meeting.

As a result of the meeting, he said, big tents were being sent in from Atlanta and as soon as they arrive, "tent-outs will be held nightly."

"EACH AFTERNOON when the march ends," King said, "the leaders will go into the surrounding area and talk up voter registration, and possibly lead fringe marches on courthouses."

Nearly 200 miles remained to Jackson. Some of the marchers sang, some talked quietly and others joked. Highway patrol cars kept a close eye on the line.

It appeared that Meredith, released from a Memphis hospital Wednesday, would not return to Mississippi for a week. He said in New York where he went to recuperate with his family, that his physician had advised him to take a week's rest.

When he does come back, apparently, he will not rejoin the march he began. He said instead he would organize a "massive reunion" march from Canton, Miss., to Jackson.

"Unless I have assurance I will not need arms, I will be armed," he added.

Phipps, 58, of Marks, Miss. was looked at by a doctor with the group and placed in a car by the highway.

Phipps gulped a drink of water and died, sitting upright in the car. Dr. King then gathered the marchers across the road.

"We are steeply saddened that one of our brothers, Armstead Phipps, has died of a heart attack," King said. The body of Phipps who had joined the march only Thursday, was sitting in plain view of the group.

"This is still Mississippi," King said, "and his death means that he was probably underpaid, overworked and underprized.

"We will go on in the spirit that he went in, because he wanted to take a stand for freedom," King said.

King then included Phipps, a retired farmhand who had a wife and several children, in a long list of martyrs and dead civil rights heroes, including President John F. Kennedy, Viola Liuzzo, Abraham Lincoln, Emmett Till, and the four girls killed in the Birmingham church bombing.

KING SAID he would have to leave the march to fly to Chicago to prepare another march there. Floyd McKissick, head of CORE, also was to leave. Both men said they would return before the march ends.

This would leave the military tant Stokely Carmichael, head of SNCC, the apparent leader of the march to Jackson.

Imagine one golfer with the swing of all these. That's what we did with a Scotch.

The whiskies we were after occur about as often as a hole in one.

Rothes, Tains, Cardows and a handful of others.

These are the prize key whiskies you'll find at the heart of the world's greatest Scotches.

Most distillers will settle for one or two of these whiskies and round out their blends with others.

We wanted to take the whole lot and combine them into one.

(Which is sort of like trying to break 70 with a broomstick.)

It took more than 20 years to collect the whiskies we wanted.

And once we had them, it took 530 tries to get the perfect combination.

But the Scotch we came for is now being bottled in Scotland at a price you'll find is fair.

In fact, once you try a bottle, we think you'll find our approach is one of the smoothest you've ever tried.

cilman to be elected from each, and the president elected at large.

One of the prime objections to this plan, as charged by several councilmen, is it could give colored citizens a high majority of Council representation.

White citizens have this majority now, with only two of the 21 councilmen being colored.

THE TENTATIVE agreement reached Wednesday evening would shift 50 precincts, in some horse-trading among the councilman, on the Bard plan.

Chief among these would be a shift of the 17th Ward, traditionally a part of the 4th District, to the 1st District.

Councilman Parks told the AFRO he would not object too strenuously to this, provided he be given in return for the 4th District precincts 1, 2, 3, 4, 4A and 4C of the 15th Ward, and possibly one other precinct there.

This is the area, roughly, northwest of Hilton St. and Dorchester.

Another variation mainly of the Bard plan would be to shift the 18th Ward from the 1st to the 6th District.

ONE BASIC agreement that found favor with the councilmen is each of the six districts would have four councilmen, and the president to be elected at large.

This would allow the 3rd and 5th districts to keep their four council seats. The 1st, 2nd, 4th and 6th Districts now have three Council seats

Under the Bard plan, each district would have three councilmen.

The matter of splitting and diluting the colored vote was highly recognizable in one of the districting plans, authored by the Pollack - Reed forces and brought in by Councilman Larry S. Beal return to the march and I will arrive at our destination," he said.

He said that Chief U.S. Marshal James McShane had expressed a willingness to walk with me "but he did not indicate whether he considered this a positive assurance he would not need to be armed.

WHEN ASKED if any differences existed between himself and the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Meredith said there were no ideological differences between them except King's reliance on a completely non - violent course of action. He said that he had met with King Wednesday morning, and that King had read the statement he had prepared.

Meredith said he would continue to concentrate on the registration drive in New York City's Harlem area where the problem is worse than in the South."

MEREDITH, exhausted from his ordeal in Mississippi, checked out of a Memphis hospital earlier in the day and in late afternoon boarded the plane for New York.

A. W. Willis, the attorney who was with Meredith during an emotional checkout from a Memphis hospital earlier in the day, said Meredith wanted to avoid a confrontation with friends or reporters.

Willis insisted that Meredith "fainted" briefly shortly after he was summarily checked out of the Bowld City Hospital on five minutes notice."

Meredith was taken out of the hospital in a wheel chair, put into a police car and driven to the place he wanted to go."

THE ATTORNEY said he conferred Tuesday with Meredith's doctor and was told he probably would be released Thursday morning. He said plans were then made for him to go to New York where his wife is awaiting him.

Willis said that at 10:55 a.m. Wednesday — five minutes before the checkout deadline — hospital staff members came to Meredith's room and told him we expect to have our room."

I got hold of the administrator (David Hosie) and told him it was unusual to have only five minutes notice but it did no good," Willis said.

HE SAID Meredith was preparing to leave the hospital when he was confronted by newsmen. He said the sick man did not want a news conference but in order to give the reporters something he took out a statement he first issued Tuesday and began reading it."

When he reached a portion of his mother's views about his brother being in Viet Nam, Meredith broke into uncontrollable sobs and fell back in the chair in which he was sitting. He was examined and pronounced to be physically all right.

Meridith returned Wednesday night to his home here to recuperate for at least a week before resuming the march.

Among other things, it would have extended the 1st District to Edmondson Ave. and Payson St. and as far north as Druid Hill Ave. and Laurens St.

The other plans were mainly variations of the Bard plan, but to the degree Mr. Hartman opinioned they were unconstitutional.
