JAMES BROWN

—Gridiron's greatest star

will be in full swing.

The action was not unexpected inasmuch as Brown had said last year, before becoming more deeply involved than ever in work outside pro football, that he intended to retire after the 1966 season.

"MY AMBITION right now is to devote as much time as possible to the National Negro Industrial and Economic Union project which stresses full participation of (our people) in the mainstream of the American economy," Brown went on.

BROWN SAID he still is friends with Art Modell, owner of the Browns.

"I talked to him by long distance telephone Wednesday," he said. "We left as the greatest of friends. There is no misunderstanding."

Brown still had another year to go on his two-year contract with the Browns. His decision to retire came after repeated warnings by Modell that he would be suspended if he failed to report to the Browns' summer training camp on time.

IN HIS nine years in the NFL, Brown compiled a record that caused many experts to rank him greater than such stars of the past as Ernie Nevers, Bronko Nagurski and Marion Motley.

Known as "superman" by teammates and rivals, Brown actually was a giant halfback running out of the T-Formation. He combined enormous power with enough speed to run for a touchdown from any point of the field.

BROWN led the National League in rushing in eight of those nine seasons and piled up a career total of 12,312 yards rushing. He is the only player in history ever to pass the 10,000 - yard rushing total.

He enjoyed his greatest season in 1963 when he gained a record 1,863 yards in 14 games. he was named NFL Player of the Year for the third time in 1966 and was a unanimous choice to the league's All-Star team.

A GRADUATE of Syracuse University, where he was an All-American, Brown also starred in Baseball, basketball, track and Lacrosse and once was offered $25,000 to become a prize fighter.

He was born Feb. 17, 1936 at St. Simons, Ga., but was brought up in Manhasset, N.Y.
