Weaver blames local inertia for mounting city problems

(UPI)

Dr. Robert C. Weaver, secretary of Housing and Urban Development, Tuesday placed the blame for the low impact of federal urban programs on the lack of response by local authorities.

In testimony before the Senate subcommittee on executive reorganization, he was answering a statement by Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, D., N.Y., that the job of helping the urban centers is not being done.

"The reason that the job isn't being done is the lack of local response to these programs," Weaver said.

Kennedy said, "Arguments over who should do the job — the federal government, the states, the cities — won't solve problems.

* * *

"WE'RE NOT USING the kind of imagination we used on the Marshall Plan or to win World War II. And the people in the cities and the slums.

The panel, headed by Sen. Abraham Ribicoff, D., Conn., is attempting to determine benefits achieved from an estimated $96 billion given by the federal government to the cities in the past decade.

It also is seeking to uncover causes of the recent violence in big city ghettoes.

Weaver detailed past and current programs, but the senators were much more interested in the second part of the probe.

* * *

"I'M TRYING TO TELL you what we're doing," said Waver, perspiring and holding a 43-page statement that outlined the uses of billions in federal aid to cities.

"No, you're not," retorted Sen. Ribicoff.

"I would say you're talking about the past. You're talking about programs that helped suburbia — not the ones that are needed for the cities in the time in which we live.

"We're reaping a whirlwind of violence in our cities that indicates that these programs are not having the impact they should."

* * *

RIBICOFF SAID 7.4 million Americans were welfare recipients with only one-third of them living in low-cost public housing. He asked whether most of this welfare money was going to "slumlords" where the welfare recipients lived.

"I think there is some degree of this," Weaver replied. He said some unrepresentative studies had been made, but did not mention their results.

Earlier, in a prepared statement urging passasg of 14 housing and urban bills before Congress, Weaver said urban problems have long been recognized and just as lone neglected.

"Already there is hopelessness in our areas of low income, non-white concentration," Weaver said.

* * *

"ANOTHER MAJOR UNFULFILLED promise, another long, drawn out effort with no terminal date in sight, would give comfort and support to those who advocate complete disillusionment with government and orderly procedures.

"As one who has documented the evils of the ghetto and has spent most of his adult life working to eliminate those evils, I cannot emphasize too much the importance of immediate action," he said.

Philippines prexy to visit Washington

WASHINGTON (NNPA) — president Ferdinand E. Marcos of the Philippines will pay a state visit to Washington on Sept. 14 to 16, it was revealed here last week.

The announcement came after months of speculation that Dr. Marcos would make such a trip. He said he had delayed his decision because of "domestic problems."

Senate unit backs minimum pay hike

The Senate Labor Committee voted 15 to 0 Tuesday to boost the federal minimum wage by 35 cents in 1968 and extend coverage to 7.2 million new workers. The increase would hike the minimum to $1.60 an hour.

The House already has approved a measure which would put the $1.60 rate into effect in 1969. The Senate Committee voted 11 to 3 against the later date.

The bill will be ready for action by the Senate next Tuesday. Senate leaders want to schedule it for floor action as soon as possiole. Nearly half a million workers would be covered for the first time as would more than six million service and retail employees
