Student rates set for plays

Mendlesohn says Americans not getting facts on war

The recent constitutional assembly election in South Viet Nam was a prime example of how the U. S. government and the American press are misleading the people, a member of the British parliament charged here this week.

Labor M.P. John Mendlesohn told an estimated 200 persons at the Unitarian Church that the more than 85 percent turnout of voters in the elections was, instead of a big victory for the south, was another example of strong-arm tactics.

He said the Daily Mail of London, a conservative publication, explained to its readers how a detailed a police card carried by the populace made it possible for the police to identify any persons who failed to vote.

He said the voter cards were used to identify enemies of the government and thus the people turned out to vote, no matter their feelings.

Some television shows did question people so that it was shown many of the workers had no idea what the election was about.

MR. MENDLESOHN said the people of the United States and his country should bring their weight to bear on the leaders to the end that the war be halted.

Mr. Mendlesohn, like many other critics of the United States role in the war, sees it as a civil war with an international conflict superimposed.

The United States maintains it has moved into the conflict because of Comunist aggression and self interest plus a commitment to protect the free south.

A manifesto signed by a caucus of laborites suggests the U. S. and forever the bombing — which it termed illegal; that the U. S. halt the buildup of troops, that Viet Nam should be declared neutral and a provisional government that truly represents the people should be set up.
