NEW SENATOR — After Massachusetts' Republican Sen. Edward W. Brooke was sworn in Tuesday, Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey, left, simulated the event for the cameras. Looking on at right is Massachusetts' Democratic senior Sen. Edward M. Kennedy.

WELL-WISHERS TIME — A happy Sen. and Mrs. Edward W. Brooke are shown here entering a rear door of a hearing room in the new Senate Building in Washington, Tuesday afternoon, for a reception in his honor. A jammed room forced the rear entry.

RECEIVING LINE — This was the receiving line at Sen. Edward W. Brooke's reception Tuesday, following swearing-in ceremonies in Washington. Brooke calm for historic moment in U. S. Senate

WASHINGTON

Massachusetts' junior senator had more the appearance of a friendly politician-statesman showing up for work than that of the featured personality in a precedent-shattering role Tuesday.

But for all Edward W. Brooke's affable and calm manner, there was no escaping the excitement and history attuned to the swearing-in of the first popularly elected colored U.S. senator.

The crowd privileged to share the historic moment in the Senate Chambers reacted in keeping with the occasion by standing as a body and according Senator Brooke the day's most prolonged applause.

Brooke, a Republican who until his election to the Senate last fall had been the highest ranking state official of his race, as attorney general of Massachusetts, is the third colored U.S. senator.

The other two served during the reconstruction period and were elected by legislative bodies. Both were Republicans.

He sits directly behind Sen. Everett Dirksen of Illinois Republican leader in the Senate.

Sen. Brooke was in the second group of senators called up to be sworn in by Vice President Humphrey.

He was escorted to the front by Democratic Senator Edward Kennedy, Massachusetts' senior senator.

When he was not busy shaking hands with other senators, Mr. Brooke alternately conversed with Sen. Young, sat with his right cheek resting on his right hand or relaxed with hands clasped about his left knee.

If he was nervous at all during his first session in the Senate, he did not show it.

AFTER the noon hour ceremony, Sen. Brooke, with Gov. John A. Volpe and his family at his side, entertained hundreds at one of the biggest such receptions ever witnessed on Capitol Hill.

Among those who managed to get inside the jammed reception room was Ambassador to Vietnam Henry Cabot Lodge, a fellow Republican from Massachusetts who ran as vice president candidate on Dick Nixon's ticket.

THE RECEPTION scheduled to get under way at 4 p.m., actually started moving over an hour later, with the appearance of Sen. Brooke and his family through a rear door of a jammed packed hearing room in the new Senate Building.

By the time, nearly 500 persons of both races stood shoulder to shoulder in the large room, waiting for a chance to greet the new senator.

A hundred or more jammed a long corridor outside, waiting to get in.

Seated on the rostrum behind a long circular desk were a group of matrons who had been key campaign workers for Brooke in Massachusetts, and were in Washington to enjoy the fruits of their labors.

They included Mesdames Mabel Wallei, Naomi Y. Hatcher, Frances Moore, Geneva B. Shaw, Winona Fredie, Elizabeth H. Asbury and Miss Mabel E. Diggs.

SEN. BROOKE headed the receiving line, with his wife, their two daughters, Renu and Edwina, his mother, Mrs. Helen Brooke, Massachusetts' Gov. Volpe, and the senator's sister from the Virgin Islands, Mrs. Helena Amos.

The crowd was so thick around Sen. Brooke and the line, it was difficult at times to see them.

Sen. Brooke, smiling happily, had a personal greeting for everyone, shaking the men's hands and hugging and kissing the women.

One highlight of the occasion was when he was greeted by two World War II buddies who had served overseas in their old 366th Infantry Regiment as officers.

Brooke as visibly overjoyed as Lewis S. Flagg 3rd assistant solicitor Washington's Department of legal researcher, Gardner, Maine, greeted him.

Mr. Redd, former commander of Company B in the 366th, had journeyed down from Maine for the occasion.

ALSO DOWN from Boston and that area were these civil rights workers to honor Brooke:

Virgil Wood, Charles H. Lewis, Mrs. Melnea Cass, Otto Snowden, Theodore Peters and Kenneth Guscott, NAACP president.

It was a happy smiling receiving line, but Mrs. Brooke, the mother, was seen dabbing at her eyes every now and then with a small handkerchief, obviously overcome with the well-wishing bestowed on her son.

Well after 3 o'clock, the room was still jammed packed, the corridor outside crowded with people trying to get in.

It was Sen. Brooke day in Washington, and the crowd at his reception proved it.

RECEPTION GUESTS — This shows some of the 500 or more well - wishers who crowded a hearing room at the new Senate Building Tuesday to honor Massachusetts' new Sen. Edward W. Brooke.

WAR BUDDIES — During World War 2, Massachusetts' new Sen. Edward W. Brooke was an officer overseas with the Regiment. Here he is seen famed 366th Infantry Regiment. Here he is seen with two fellow officers who served with him through North Africa and Italy. At top is Benny Redd, of Gardner, Maine, a legal researcher there, and at bottom is Lewis S. Flagg 3rd, assistant solicitor in Washington's Department of Interior. (AFRO photos by L. Henry Phillips)

How roll-call vote barred A. Powell

WASHINGTON

Only 126 Democrats voted with Rep. Adam Clayton Powell in his fight to be seated in the 90th Congress Tuesday.

A solid phalanx of 186 Republicans joined with 119 Democrats, an overwhelming majority of them Southerners, cast votes to make the Harlem legislator stand aside for five weeks while a bi-partisan committee investigates his activities.

This is how the roll-call went:

Tarheel Elks ask solon jobs

DURHAM, N. C. (UPI)—An Elks leader in North Carolina has written the state's 11 congressmen and two senators in Washington to ask them to consider hiring colored workers in their offices.

Alexander Barnes, director of civil liberties for the North Carolina State Association of Elks, said the group is going all out on this project.

In his letter he asked the legislators if "you have any colored workers attached to your office staff "in any capacity, and if so, how many?" and those "We would further like to know if you would consider hiring those qualified"

Barnes said he feels the solons from North Carolina will reply favorably, and he plans to send every Elk Lodge in the state a copy.

SOUTH BALTIMORE NOTES

Civic Interest Group dates important meet

By WALTER W. E. HILL Sr.

The Mt. Winans Civic Interest Group, Inc. meeting is one of most concern these days when the home owners will set the faith of the community. Bulldozers have already started their work.

How far will they go with these monsters and what they will knock down or build up will depend largely on what transpires in the meetings of the organization. Remember, one can sit by and cause his own destruction.

The South Baltimore Playground invites you to become an active member in the Golden Age Club which meets on Wednesdays at 2 p.m. at the Leadenhall Baptist Church. T. Madison Garrison Sr., is director of the Center.

The William's Male Chorus of Jones Tabernacle Baptist Church, Fremont and Washington blvd. will observe their 16th anniversary at the church on Sunday, Jan. 22.

Mrs. Armstead, president of the gospel choir, invites all to be with them, at their anniversary service Sunday, Jan. 15 at Shiloh C. C. Church. The Women's Christian Service Council of Shiloh will celebrate their anniversary on the 22nd. Mrs. Elizabeth Roy is president.

Happy birthday wishes to Timothy Jefferson, Miss India Montgomery, Miss Yvonne Harrison, James P. Gosnell, Mrs. Mamie V. Hill, Mrs. Ruth Johnson, Mrs. Clara Roane, Mrs. Lillian Fee, Mrs. Mary L. Smith, Mrs. Margie Price, Mrs. Gertrude Powell, Miss Carl Wallace and Mrs. Patina Dadd.

Your cards and calls can best convey your thoughts to the sick and shut-ins.

Rep. Thompson appoints Clark

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Rep. Fletcher Thompson, R-Ga., has named a colored field representative to help him serve constituents in Georgia's 5th District.

Thompson announced the appointment of Charles E. Clark of Atlanta to fill the job in his Atlanta District office. Clark has been employed by the Atlanta Urban League for the past two years.

Thompson said this is the first time in history that such a move has been made on behalf of colored voters of Georgia.

"My desire as a Congressman is to serve all constituents equally," Thompson said. "We hope to be able to seek out and solve the problems of the people."

-Mrs. Dixon

was a member of the Maryland House of Delegates. She was the widow of William B. Dixon, insurance broker and bail bondsman, from whom she inherited the bulk of her estate.

THE ESTATE consisted of two shares of corporate stock of William B. Dixon, Inc., worth $23,000.00; property at 2429 Woodbrook Ave., valuable jewelry, chattels in the McCulloh St. property where she lived and at one time conducted a women's wear business; an automobile and $526.62 in cash.

Also included were 20 shares of Metro common stock and 10 shares of Metro preferred stock. The former are worth $20.00 and the latter, $100.00.

MRS. DIXON'S estate was administered by Mrs. Charlotte Murray, who had served as secretary to Mr. Dixon, and Alexander Shark, attorney.

It was distributed under a trust will made by Mrs. Dixon three and a half months prior to her death.

It was in this four - paragraph document that she confirmed the joint title of her home at 1906 McCulloh St. with her aunts, and gave the balance of the estate to the Rev. Mr. Thornton. Her other brother, Edward George, was not mentioned in the will.

Yale law dean says court can end de facto segregation

By ROGER J. NISSLY

"What the Supreme Court is telling us" with its decisions bearing on education, the dean of Yale University Law School explained Wednesday, is that school children "are not 'Dick and Jane.' They are their proper selves."

Dean Louis H. Pollak thus illustrated to 345 teachers his thesis that the Court's modern decisions have been concerned with recognizing the individuality of each student and with "enlarging the areas of freedom of choice."

His talk, "The Supreme Court and Education," was the second in a series on "critical issues" for the public school staff held at Eastern High School.

In response to a question from the audience, Dean Pollak declared that the Court still has a "judicial weapon" which "awaits in the wings" to attack de facto segregation.

That weapon against de facto segregation — which in effect causes the inequalities of segregated education —could be used "the longer northern states and cities permit the situation."

And as long as "no positive effort is made to relieve the situation," the speaker added.

HE CALLED attention to the need to forge positive plans to combat this form of segregation, which is not a result of "racial discrimination alone," but also comes from the housing-employment education "syndrome."

Not pointing the finger only at Baltimore, Dean Pollak, who is also associated with the NAACP Legal Defense Fund, said de facto segregation of schools is a national problem.

During his talk, he noted that only 12 per cent of colored children in 11 southern states are attending integrated schools.

"At that rate it would take a full century to achieve integration," he said.

But he added that in the previous year the figure was only 6 per cent and attributed the rise to the new Federal guidelines.

Dan Pollack traced the history of Supreme Court education decisions through the one 70 years ago, which first set up the separate but equal doctrine in a transportation case, back to the first case in which Daniel Webster argued, for Dartmouth College.

The modern era of decisions, stemming from 40 years ago and leading to the landmark decision in 1954, shows an increasing "concern with the integrity of the individual student," he said.
