Mister, here's your bourbon.
It's made by hand. With meticulous care. The hopelessly antiquated, deliciously old-fashioned way. Made by men who know good corn and won't take less. Who stop making whiskey when their limestone pond drops below the "perfect bourbon water" level. If you've never tasted hand made Kentucky whiskey, try Henry McKenna. It's bourbon, Mister. Could be your bourbon.

Big-city schools rapped on de facto desegregation

By ROGER J. NISSLY

Failure of large city school systems to formulate policies to combat de facto segregation reveals "deplorable insensitivity," says a former local school superintendent, Dr. John H. Fischer.

As president of Columbia University Teachers College, Dr. Fischer delivered the remarks at the college's dinner in connection with the annual meeting of the American Association of School Administrators in Atlantic City, N.J., Feb 12

He said that justifying a lack of school action on de facto segregation "by a short run conception of efficiency" reveals "deplorable insensitivity to long - range social needs and educational possibilities"

* * *

THE FAILURE pointed out by the respected educator has been given statistical weight by a U.S. Civil Rights Commission study and report, exposing segregated school patterns in Baltimore and other cities across the country.

"The trancendent is sue," Dr. Fischer declared, "is whether American children of any race can be best prepared for life in an open society if they attend schools that symbolize racial isolation.

"Put that way, the issue is not disposed of by pointing out the practical impossibility of desegregating a school in the heart of a ghetto, or the length of the bus ride to an outlying suburb.

"Nor is it enough to show what embarrassments follow when children of widely different backgrounds are suddenly seated in the same classroom and taught in traditional ways."

* * *

THE FORMER superintendent said that school system ignoring the problem, reason that "since the school does not determine housing policies, community plans, migration patterns, or cultural practices . . . the school has no responsibility for dealing with the consequences they produce."

He deplored the reasoning that argues because "certain schools happen to become segregated" from these conditions, "the school, having had no hand in the cause, need raise no finger to find a cure"

In his discussion of the problem facing large city school systems, which he ranked "at the first level of priority" of the problems "facing American society today," Dr. Fischer gave a few examples:

1. "Children who cannot understand and are not interested in the unfamiliar culture portrayed in their readers are not likely to read better if instead of one such book they are offered three.

2. "Doubling th faculty in a slum school does little good if, in classes of 20, teachers employ the same procedures they used in teaching 40.

3. "Adding a library to a school will not make much difference if children are not given the freedom and taught to choose books according to their own needs and moods and so to build their own literary tastes."

* * *

TREATMENT OF the broader and more complex problems, of which the foregoing ones are a part, gains more from "perceptiveness and adapatability" than froc "if fficient adherence to established practice," the educator averred.

With de facto segregation, to achieve equal educational opportunity "it is not enough to concentrate attention wholly upon the microcism of the classroom and to formulate policies that deal with the matter only at that level," he said.

He said that the long-range needs and goals must be defined in terms of "humanity and equality," to lead school boards "toward forming policies that respond realistically to those issues."

In this program, the superintendent does not alone establish policy, but serves as the "principal architect of policy."

Ironically, he observed that "it would be less than accurate, however, to suggest that every school board and every community are ready for leadership of this character."

While Baltimore superintendent, Dr. Fischer gained nationwide notice for being the first administrator to move against a dual school system after the Supreme Court declared them unconstitutional.

MENTIONED as a possible successor to retiring Supreme Court Justice Tom C. Clark this week was U. S. Solicitor General Thurgood Marshall. Marshall was listed with four others, including two Congressmen and two Cabinet members as possible nominees to the High Court bench. Justice Clark, 67, announced his retirement plans when President Johnson nominated his son, Ramsey Clark, to be U. S. Attorney General.

2 local students win top scholastic awards

Two Baltimore students, whose interest range from physics to fencing, are among some 250 outstanding colored students who have four year scholarships in the third National Achievement Scholarship Program.

The boys, both students at Baltimore's Polytechnic Institute are Eryk J. Forrest, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward A. Forrest of 3411 Wabash Ave, and Charles M Collier son of Mr. and Mrs Charles S. Collier of 2603 Chelsea Terrace.

Charles, 16, is the Maryland State Prep School fencing champion and president of the computer club at his high school.

A member of Union Baptist Church, he is considering making application to a number of the nation's top universities.

Eryk, 17, is president of the chess club at his school and also an officer of the stamp and coin club.

Eryk said he is considering applying for admission to the University of Chicago where he would like to major in physics.

Erky's interest in physics disproves the old days "like father like son." Eryk's father I sa counselor at Lombard Jr. High School. His mother is a physics teacher at Baltimore's Douglass High School.

He is a member of St. James Episcopal Church.

THE 1967 Achievement Scholars, coming from 34 states and the District of Columbia, will share awards valued at $1.4 million. The aid given to each student is individually determined according to his need, and may range from $250 to $1,500 per year.

A record 55 corporations, foundations, and individuals provided sponsored Achievement Scholarships in the 1967 program, considerably expanding the awards underwritten by Ford Foundation grant funds.

More than 30,000 students participated in the 1966-67 program. Of these, 4,500 were nominated by their schools and another 1000 became candidates by submitting National Merit Scholarship Qualifying Test scores and receiving the endorsements of their schools. Winners were chosen from a group of 1,152 finalists, who were announced in November.

All Achievement Scholars were chosen for their outstanding ability and potential for future accomplishment by a selection committee made up of experienced college admissions directors and high school counselors. The committee based its selections on data submitted by the students and their schools, test scores, and other assessment material completed by the students.

Financial need is not considered in selecting Achievement Scholars, but need determines how much a winner will receive.

The average first-year stipend of the 1966 Achievement Scholars was $1,185.

The panelists, who are members of the Baltimore Life Underwriters' Association, will respond to questions that will be phoned in by viewers one hour prior to air time and throughout the program on 889-3063.

Posted by TV 11's Tom Cole, the program will strive to help people prepare themselves and their families for future security.

Powell off House payroll

Adam Clayton Powell was officially stricken from the House payroll Thursday.

Speaker John W. McCormack then notified New York State that Harlem's congressional seat was vacant.

There was a good chance that some members of the ex-congressman's staff would stay on, however, to handle the business of the now non-represented congressional district. House rules presumably would permit this.

* * *

MEANTIME, Rep. Donald W. Riegle Jr., R-Mich., urged the House to go beyond the Powell case in cracking down on members' misconduct.

"The people are waiting," Riegle said in a speech. "We must not stop with Powell's exclusion. I urge the House to complete the job of ethics and reform."
