Says board seeks opportunity for all

The Baltimore Board of School Commissions believes in giving every youngster, who has the desire and ability, a start on the road to becoming an intellectual, Eli Frank, Jr., board president, declared, Saturday.

Mr. Frank described an intellectual as "one who knows and thinks, also."

SPEAKING at the luncheon session of the 24th Annual Conference of the Maryland League of Women's Clubs, he expressed the opinion that it is only through education that we can arrive at a better world.

But, he added, education cannot do the whole job. Better relations must be included.

MR. FRANK told the club women that while the School Board may not always make the popular choice, it makes the best choice in the opinion of the members. He pointed out that priorities have to be juggled and that times temper the winds of decision.

Baltimore, he said, is fortunate in having teacher personnel dedicated not only to teaching of the 3-R's, but in creating an environment in which all can live.

* * *

TEACHERS, he said, are now in the driver's seat, and the earlier this is realized the better off the system will be. He noted that Baltimore prepares less than two-thirds of the teachers needed, that a third must be recruited.

The Baltimore School System, said Mr. Frank, has a long end proud record of the separation of State and Education. But with the increasing need for State and Federal money, political participation must become more forceful, not only for the betterment of education, but for better human relations.

MRS. MAURICE A. LEE, retiring president of the League, presided at the luncheon.

Other program participants were:

Mrs. Elizabeth M. Moss, who introduced the speaker; Mrs. Talmadge Hill, who gave the incidental music; the Rev. Reginald Daniels, who gave the grace; Miss Florence Shipman, soloist; Mrs. Thelma Daley who gave summaries on workshops held during the morning session, and Miss Linda C. Wharton, who gave a piano solo. . . Lula Mackay

MRS. MARGARET H. JACKSON became vice president; and other officers named were:

Mesdames Cora Gibson, second vice president; Lillie W. Strothers, recording secretary; Inez B. Smith, assistant recording secretary; Miss Sandra E. East, corresponding secretary.

Mrs. Florence Williams, assistant corresponding secretary; Miss Vivian Young, financial secretary; Mrs. Marion Jackson, treasurer; Miss Clarice Brooks, parliamentarian;

Mesdames Thelma Daley, publicity editor; Mabel Scott, sergeant at arms; Beryl Williams, historian; and Virgina L. Brown, chaplain.

The election took place at the morning session at which the group also held a memorial to the late Dr. Carl Murphy. The music was by Mrs. Talmadge Hill and the meditation by Mrs. Evelyn H. Benston.

THE BUSINESS session was followed by workshops in which members explored the theme "Education far Better Human Relations in Our Changing World."

Four workshops under this theme, heard experts on Education for Youth, Education and Public Affairs, Intercultural Relations and Education and Health.

* * *

MRS. VIVIAN E. WASHINGTON, principal of the Edgar Allan Poe School, at which young women can continue their education during pregnancy, pointed out that these pupils are more than likely to continue their education and to become productive citizens.

Towards this end, she said, the girls receive medical attention, and are related to social agencies to prevent repeats and encourage responsibility.

DEPARTMENTS OF education, churches and service agencies have a responsibility to contribute to the development of individual citizens, the workshop on community programs found.

Panelists pointed out that not only the impovished need educating, but the affluent also need information.

* * *

THE WORKSHOP on Intercultural Relations found that the problem of community tegration is far away from a workable solution. Large gaps exist in the areas of housing, education, employment, health and welfare.

The Rev. Robert J. Fringo, of Fels Church Parish, told the group that there is need to bridge the gap between the rich and the poor and to teach persons the basic truths of life, thereby helping them to dissolve fobias and prejudices.

Personal involvement is needed, not only in setting up programs, but giving them adequate backbone for working solutions, said Joseph Purdy, chairman of the Community Relations Commission.

* * *

SIGNAL FAILURES, as pointed out by the workshop participants included segregated housing, segregated schools, failure to place teachers in schools where they can best serve and the lack of enough colored police.

Dr. Edythe Schoenrich, director of the Bureau of Chronic Diseases, pointed out the need to identify chronic illnesses that come on slowly. Many, she said, begin in early childhood and last for the rest of the patient's life.

Dr. Schoenrich was a panelist for the workshop on Education and Health.
