Jury convicts young man for rape, robbery

James Robert English, 1000 block Gilmor St., was found guilty of rape and robbery by a jury of 10 women and two men when he appeared in Criminal Court Tuesday.

The panel that included eight colored citizens recommended the 22-year-old man be spared the death ppnalty. However, through his attorney, Donald Daneman, the tall heavy-set young man indicated he would file for a new trial.

Judge James A. Perrott deferred sentence while the motion is pending.

English was accused of criminal assault of a 20-year-old woman, mother of a small child, on Dec. 30 in the 1200 block Smithson St. house where he resided.

WITNESSES PRODUCED by Leroy Carroll, assistant state's attorney, testified English and another man accosted the woman at Calhoun St. and Riggs Ave.

After threatening to kill her, the woman said the two men dragged her into an end row house she recalled had a new wrought iron railing.

No one was there since English's girlfriend, with whom he lived, had gone visiting. The Christmas tree was in the front room and the couch covers were "frilly," the prosecuting witness stated.

Further testimony revealed the woman was assaulted four times, brutally slapped about the face and finally thrown bodily out the back door.

According to her statement before the court, the other man whose identity is still unknown, gave her back her purse from which $6 was taken.

English arrested in the house later that night, said he had never seen the woman before and that he was at home alone during the time the incident was said to have occurred.
