Black again stays Coleman's death

Supreme Court Justice Hugo L. Black Tuesday stayed the execution of Johnny P. Coleman, scheduled to die in Alabama's electric chair on May 19 for the 1961 murder of a white mechanic, John D. Johnson, in Eutaw.

The stay will be good until the high court disposes of Ala. Coleman's appeal from a ruling against him on Feb. 9 by the state supreme court.

The court already has heard one Coleman appeal. On May 4, 1964, the court ruled that he was entitled to a hearing on his claim of racial systematic exclusion from both the grand jury and trial jury in his case.

After another round in state courts, Coleman is still challenging jury selection practices in Greene County, the high court disposes of Ala.

THESE TWO giraffes and their best friend, Zoo Keeper Donald Thomas, 2401 Keyworth Ave., will be joined by three more members of the long-necked clan in June when they come down from New York quarantine and go outside in the Giraffe House yard. Mr. Thomas, married, father of five children, was formerly in charge of the animals in radiology at the Johns Hopkins Medical Center.

New giraffe house to open in Druid Hill Park Tuesday

By ELIZABETH M. OLIVER

A few days ago when the weather turned toward "outdoor time" thousands of visitors spent the day in Druid Hill Park.

The season opened officially Sunday, April 2 when temperatures were in the 80's.

And, as more than 15,000 persons poured into the world-famed zoo, the animals said, "Oops, here come the people."

This is true since, for example there is a certain building especially designed and constructed so that the people are in the center wieh the animals walking around the sides "looking at the people".

* * *

THE NEW building is the Giraffe House located just above Rock Island and not very far from the Children's Zoo.

A circular structure with the area for visitors in the center, it is so unusual the director of the Zoo, Arthur Watson says it may come up for an architectural award soon.

The Giraffe House will be formally dedicated Monday, April 17. At 3:30 p.m. the public is cordially invited to attend, will hear speeches from public officials.

Mr. Watson states, "We'll all have something to say and then Mayor Theodore McKeldin will cut the ribbon."

The cheerful interior of the spacious building is transformed into a tropical setting by living plants and trees found in African jungles.

"So the giraffes will feel at home," Mr. Watson states. Other features include piped in music for both the animals and the people.

At present two 10 foot-tall "baby" giraffes (a two-year old girl and a two-year old boy) are walking around looking at the people.

Cute, inquisitive and eager to learn all they can about human beings, they were given to the Zoo by the Geldea Foundation of Baltimore.

When they become grown-ups they will be about 18 feet 3 ½ inches tall.

* * *

MR. WATSON told the AFRO he "picked them up" on his search for giraffes in Rhodesia in November.

Valued at $10,000 'Baby Boy' and 'Baby Girl' Giraffe will probably receive official names from the donors later.

In June they will be joined by three more of their kinfolks from East Africa.

Sharing the luxurious one-of-a-kind home away from home are two tapirs, vegetable-eating little fellows who resemble but are not members of the pig family.

Together, residents of the Giraffe House enjoy carrots, lettuce, apples, and other items on a health-giving diet. The Zoo occupies 200 of the park's 700 acres.

* * *

IN OCTOBER the new hippopotamus building will be completed and ready for the hippos to look at the people.

The children's Zoo opened yesterday, Thursday, April 13. Before closing in the middle of November it is estimated nearly a half a million parents and children will have allowed the animals to look at them.

As the main day-in-the-passe attraction, the Children's Zoo is a holding spot for baby animals weaned from their mothers and in still the childhood stage.
