Wallace Clark leads Baltimore Symphony

WALLACE CLARK, guest conductor of the Baltimore Symphony poses for AFRO photographer with Christopher Wolfe, soloist at a recent symphony performance.

By ADAH K. JENKINS

Event-Of-The-Week: Wallace Clark, one of our most promising young musicians is conducting the Baltimore Symphony at Goucher and Morgan during the third year of special programs presenting American music.

The project was supported by the Rockefeller Foundation and federal funds thru the Baltimore City public schools.

Mr. Clark, who formerly taught at Morgan State College, receives his degree of master of music, maioring in conducting, from Peabody this week.

He is among the post-graduates selected to conduct in the Goucher-Rockefeller program, an opportunity usually open only to those pursuing their doctorate.

Mr. Clark conducted the local premier performance of the clarinet concerto by Baltimore's Howard Thatcher, well known composer and for 44 years a faculty member at Peabody.

The slender director held his forces with precise and confident gesture, with a well defined and unified feeling for pulse, dynamics and the melodic line. The concerto is a warm, gracious work, largely in the mood of Romantic period.

Christopher Wolfe, from the Symphony, was the soloist, performing with luscious tone, brilliant technic and musicianly interpretation, for which the orchestra gave able support and coordination.

A small but highly responsive audience enthusiastically applauded Mr. Clark, the performers and Mr. Thatcher, who was present.

Dr. Elliott Galkin, head of the music department at Goucher, introduced the concert and also conducted (N.B.A review of the entire concert will appear in "Musical Moments.")

The modestly personable Wallace Clark is a native of Norfolk, Virginia, where he began his musical studies on the clarinet at the age of 8 with his brother.

He was conducting his high school band at 14 and, after hearing a concert by the Norfolk Symphony, determined to be a conductor.

At Florida A. and M. where he was a classmate of J. Spencer Hammond, Clark conducted the symphonette and chamber orchestra, studying with Dr. Foster, his chosen career was continued at Indiana University.

He is enthusiastic in his appreciation of the Thatcher work with its nostalgic feeling, widely spaced harmonic material and rewarding melodies.

The young director is especially interested in becoming a recording conductor with emphasis on 20 Century music, stating, "There is so much good music lying dormant that deserves the attention of recording companies."

Mr Clark is married to a pianist, who is also a graduate of Florida A. and M. Of their three children he laughingly remarked "The 16-month-old boy has begun conducting already, but only when he hears the classics on records. No rock and roll for him."

The Morgan program was repeated at Goucher Thursday evening, where it was taped and will be released on a series of nation wide broadcasts.
