MUSICAL MOMENTS

Another excellent performance by the combined Douglas choirs

By ADAH K. JENKINS

If one had any doubts about the present day standards of choral music in some areas of our community, they were dispelled at once by the excellent performance of Brahms' "German Requiem" by the combined choirs of Douglas Memorial Community Church.

Under the confident and dedicated direction of Choirmaster J. Spenser Hammond, this profound and intricate work was given a well disciplined and artistically moving rendition.

Having given excerpts from the "Requiem" before the choir possessed a familiarity with its many technical difficulties and could concentrate on aspects of beauty and interpretation.

This is of the utmost importance since the Mass does not follow the liturgy of the Roman Catholic version, but is based on Biblical texts that stress faith and comfort after grief.

Naomi Corbin Booker, soprano, proved to be an adequate soloist whose voice with assistance in intonation and production, has great promise.

William Griggsby, guest baritone, contributed to his arias his usual scholarship and well balanced performance.

Highly dramatic as well as celestially lovely moments were given appropriate support by the guest instrumentalists — Donald King, organist, Rosemarie Bottallicio, harpist, and Richard Janes, trympanist.

Invocation and benediction were pronounced respectively by the Rev. John Day, assistant minister, and the Rev. Marion Bascom, minister.

THE BALTIMORE Hebrew Congregation, long a stronghold of interfaith and intercultural progress, presented recently a concert of dedication for the Dalsheimer Auditorium.

With an audience that number 1,500 the concert was given by the combined choirs of the Baltimore and Washington Hebrew Congregations, Eubanks Chorale and members of the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Herman Berlinski and Donald King.

Highlighting the event was a cantata by Dr. Berlinski, music director and organist of the Washington Hebrew Congregation. The work, entitled "Her Children Rise Up and Call Her Blessed," was commissioned by the Baltimore Hebrew Congregation Sisterhood in honor of Mrs. Hugo Dalsheimer.

The text assigned to a narrator and singers is based upon Old Testament lives of famous women and the closing sentences from the famous Anne Frank Diary

With the composer on the podium, a sensitively rewarding performance was heard of a modern work that has both melodic and rhythmic appeal, affording brilliant choral interludes and artistic challenge to the soloists — Phyllis Frankel, Betty Hankins, Ellen Barlar Kinz, Jerold Siena and Frank Whitmore.

The score was played by Mr. King, Macks Statham, Shirley Matthews, harpsichordist, Rosemarie Botallico, harp, Eva Anderson, celeste and three percussionists, Richrd James, Leo la Page and John Crockin.

Following the concert Mrs. N. Schnaper, chairman of publicity, announced the program of the Baltimore Hebrew Congregation for next season.

A WARM personal glow of communication with his audience marked William E. O'Maro's concert which was sponsored recently by the Baltimore Fellowship at the Allen Masonic Temple.

His presence combined with an expansive voice of considerable range and flexibuity deserved the enthusiastic response of a sizable audience.

In religious, works and secular songs from Broadway shows, Mr. O'Maro seems equally at home in feeling and conveying their message.

He was confidently supported by Mary Brown, pianist, who also joined him in a duet encore. With his richly endowed talent, both in voice and personality, Mr. O'Maro should feel encouraged to continue his studies and exploration of the rewarding literature for baritone.

Samuel Daniels, Grand Master of the Masonic Temple—A and F.M. introduced Mrs. Ruth Redwine, chairman of the concert, and Miss Ruth Fegley, executive director of the Baltimore Fellowship.

SUMMER SESSIONS: 56 summer session at Peabody from June 19 thru July 28 at the main conservatory and at the Towson Branch of the Preparatory Department has been announced by Ray E. Robinson, summer session director.

An innovation this year will be an Institute on new teaching methods in elementary school music, using the Carl Orff and Kodaly methods and an exploratory keyboard workshop.

* * *

Other workshops are exploratory guitar and electronic music, a choarl school, band directing and high school instrumental materials.

Applied music, theory, music literature, music history and music education will be taught at all levels from graduate to prepartory.

* * *

Members of the Claremont Quartet, who will be artists-in-residence are offering chamber music coaching. If enrollment in the string departments permits, Marc Gottlieb, the quartet's first violinist, will direct a chamber orchestra of summer students.

* * *

Before the session begins, two special workshops will be held, beginning June 22 — a World Library of Sacred music on musical aspects of the liturgical year and a piano master class.

The latter will be co-ordinated by Julio Esteban and taught by Leon Fleisher, Irwin Freumdlich, Paul Jacobs, Sylvia Marlowe and William Newman.

* * *

Japanese string teacher, Shinichi Suzuki, jazz guitarist Charlie Byrd, Hungarian music educator Katinka Daniel and French liturgical composer Father Lucien Deiss will be among the visiting faculty members.

Sunday, June 4 from 3 to 5 p.m. at Druid Hill Park, the opening of the summer band concert season, featuring the Baltimore Municipal Band, with Weldon J. Irvine conducting and Matthew Fraling song leader. Stephanie Sodaro, music and administrative supervisor, Bureau of Music, Department of Recreation and Parks.

Whiting explains future role of today's colleges

DURHAM, N.C.—Dr. Albert N. Whiting, president-elect of North Carolina College, told members of the American Association of College and University Business officers meeting in Durham last weekend, that there is a strategic role in creating the "great citizen" for the "great society."

The Morgan State College dean spoke on the topic, "Higher Education—Investment in Tomorrow," giving the business officers some insight into his vision of the future of colored colleges.

Whiting discussed the world of the future/a world of supersonic speeds, space travel, amazing medical discoveries, computerized business and education—and warned that the future will require an informed, humane citizenry well acquainted with the humanities and with technology.

HE CITED the Jencks and Riesman report on "The colored American College" as evidence that the predominantly colored college is not now meeting the demands placed upon it.

Although Whiting stressed that he did not agree fully with the report, which termed the colleges a "disaster area," he said he was forced to agree with the authors' conclusion that "these colleges are so repressive and monotonous that at least among the men, it may well be the better students who leave in frustration and boredom."

These schools "must reorganize and accept a special mission, namely investigating, preserving and disseminating the contributions of colored people to the nation and the world." Colored educators must fulfill this role, as Catholic educators have for Catholics and Jewish educators for Jews, he said.

To Be Equal

Poor people are not 'chiselers'

By WHITNEY M. YOUNG, JR.

The myth that people on welfare are "chiselers" who don't want to work has been repeated so often that it falls into the technique of the "Big Lie" — repeat a lie often enough and people will believeit.

Every time a politician wants to make a hit with the home folks or a newspaper wants to boost circulation, they go back to the old welfare chiselers routine.

Now they will have too find another horse to flog, because a White House official has made public the figures on welfare recipients and they show that only 50,000 — less than 1 percent — are able to work.

There are 7.3 million people in the U.S. getting some form of welfare aid. A little over 2 million are aged, 700,000 are blind or handicapped, 3.5 million are children, and the rest are the parents of these children who are unable to support them. Almost a million of these are mothers who can't leave their kids to go to work, while most of the 150,000 fathers on welfare are handicapped in one way or another.

These people don't sound like chiselers to me or to any other fair-mined person. They are victims of a system which has failed them and they are people who may have met with misfortune in life, but they must be accorded the basic dignities due all human beings. The present welfare system treats them in a manner which robs them of dignity and frustrates efforts to make them self-sufficient.

THIS NATION reveres the family and everyone agrees that a strong family unit is essential to society, yet the welfare system actually helps break up many families.

Children who receive welfare in the Aid to Dependent Children program often pay for the aid by losing their fathers. That's because of the "man-in-the-house" rule which forbids assistance to the children if there is an able-bodied man living with them.

So many fathers must leave their families to keep their children from starving. The rule is enforced by Gestapo-like raids, usually in the middle of the night, to check on whether a man is home.

There are many other abuses — most states pay benefits which don't even come up to their own standards, payments average below the federal poverty standards, eligibility is often denied on unfair grounds, clients must submit to harrassment and humiliating investigations, and incentives are dimmed because benefits are cut by a dollar for each dollar earned by anyone in the family.

There is also another myth about welfare — that colored people gravitate to big cities because welfare payments are better there. This is false. Only about a third of welfare recipients are non-white, and those who go to the cities are doing what millions of immigrants before them did — they go in search of work and they go to escape the brutal repression which still exists in large sections of the United States.

They are no different from the white families who leave poverty-stricken areas of the South or the Appalachian region in search of jobs and dignity.

* * *

NEW YORK'S welfare commissioner, Mitchell I. Ginsburg, recently said that the welfare system was "designed to save money rather than people, and the tragedy is that it does neither".

We will have to find a better way to assist those in need. Through no fault of their own, millions of our fellow Americans are unable to get even the basic necessities of life, and they need help.

There are few businesses, farms, or banks, which don't receive subsidies in one form or another. Subsidies to human beings are at least as legitimate as these government subsidies to property or to business which amount to billions of dollars yearly.

The problem facing us now is to provide the basic necessities no human being should be deprived of, while allowing recipients to maintain their dignity and providing incentives to restore them to self-sufficiency wherever possible.

It is obvious that the nation needs an economic security program which will insure that all invididuals, as a matter of right, will be guaranteed minimum payments to keep them above the poverty line, while all who can work will find jobs, with the government acting as an employer of last resort if necessary.

Senate passed $2.2 billion bill to aid youths

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate has passed the Johnson administration's $2.2 billion supplemental money bill which includes funds to create summer programs for youths in potentially explosive urban slum areas.

The measure now goes to a Joint Conference Committee that will iron out the differences between the Senate and House versions. The House bill is $218,620,800 less than the Senate's.

Among the major items in the Senate bill is $75 million to provide additional swimming pools, recreation facilities, and educational programs for youths in urban ghetto areas.

Also included is a ban on the Office of Economic Opportunity using any anti-poverty funds to subsidize newspapers or other commercial media.
