TOP PRIZE this year is $500 in cash and 17 other winners will share in prizes totaling $1,000.

So hurry. Now is the time to really start rolling as the race goes into the home stretch.

In many ways the Student of the Year Contest is just like the Kentucky Derby. Sometimes near the end of the race a horse will break from the pack and go across the line to victory.

So get going. Who knows? Perhaps by this time next week our postman will have some helpers.

Masons honor Edgar Shelton

The Andrew J. Evans Lodge 102, of Turner Station, held a testimonial dinner Saturday in honor of Past Master Edgar Shelton.

The affair was held at the Prince Hall Masonic Temple.

Mr. Shelton, 651 Avondale Rd., is a retired government worker.

The honoree was presented a cash gift and the Past Master's apron. The presentation was made by Worshipful Master James Davis in recognition of Mr. Shelton's "year of devoted service to Masonry and to the community."

"It was a very nice, pleasant surprise," Mr. Shelton said. "And my wife, Sweetie, was as surprised as I was."

He is a native of Richmond, Va., and still travels back and forth to that city, where he remains an active member of the Old Timers Social Club and the Old Colonials.

86 YEARS YOUNG —John H. Murphy Jr., shown with his wife, Marie, belied his age when he acknowledged testimonials at Shrine banquet in his honor Saturday evening attended by some 200 guests at Baltimore's Sheraton Belvedere Hotel.

29th to train in Va. again

The 29th Infantry Division —minus one brigade from Maryland and Virginia will depart this Saturday to begin its annual active duty military training.

Nearly 3000 Maryland Guardsmen will join Virginia Guardsmen of the famed Blue and Gray Division for two weeks of training from June 3 to 17.

Normally the 29th Division's 3rd Brigade would train with the rest of the Division, but this year the brigade will train for three weeks in August, taking part in a massive war games exercise known as "Kittyhawk."

The Division will train at Camp A. P. Hill and at Camp Pickett. Both installations are in Virginia.

First OIC grads to march Sunday

The normal tranquil flow of activity at Opportunities Industrialization Center was disrupted this week as its first graduating class rehearsed for exercises scheduled for Sunday at 5 p.m. at Sharp Street Memorial Church.

Mrs. Shirley Forney stood by a stairway just outside the double sliding doors of the main auditorium where the rehearsal was taking place, and talked to an AFRO reporter.

"It's not much more money than I'm making now, but it's the idea of having a chance of moving up — and improving myself," she said.

One of the 11 persons who completed OIC pre-vocational classes, Mrs. Forney, 34, has been working at Hochschild Kohn as a clerk in the shipping department since Monday. Her starting salary is $56 a week.

"I was working at another department store as a kitchen helper at $37 a week, before OIC got me this job," she revealed.

• • •

THE HIGHEST salary the mother of 6 has ever drawn prior to her present job is $40 a week, working in a steel plant in New York. A native of Baltimore, she completed the 10th grade at Carver. Her husband is a driver for a Pikesville cleaning company.

"I'm planning to come back here and take typing as soon as they get the typewriters," Mrs. Forney continued. "I've really been looking forward every evening to attending these classes," she said.

"Everybody here is in your corner and if you don't get it, it's nobody's fault but your own."

• • •

MRS. FORNEY and the other graduates received primarily intensive instruction in computational skills, and communication skills. A course in minority history, grooming and hygiene, special classes ranging from budgeting and "how to apply for a job" to birth control, rounded out a curriculum projected by OIC as "takin in the whole man."

"Attitude is as important as ability," said Mrs. Betty Foy, supervisor of training. "Once a trainee is convinced he can make progress if he applies himself, he is well on the way to a better life."

A bell rang and doors began opening.

PUPILS CROWDED the corridors — mostly women, ages ranging from teenagers to 62-year-old Mrs. Mary Myers.

One middle-aged woman patted Mrs. Forney on the shoulder in passing.

"I should have started when you did," she said.

"Won't be long as it has been," Mrs. Forney answered.

The sound of muted singing came through the doors of the auditorium. The "graduating class" was practicing a song, a skate to OIC written by one of the graduates. A 38-year-old mother of three teenage boys, the songwriter plans to quit her job at a local cleaners as soon as she has collected her vacation pay, and take a clerical job under OIC auspices.

"I'll have no trouble placing her," Rene Etienne, OIC job developre later explained. "She's a hard worker, and she's willing to learn. You'd be surprised at how many employers are willing to give a person a break when they see they're really serious about helping themselves."

Etienne said the graduates' salaries would range from $55 to $85 a week. "But all of these are white collar jobs with opportunities for advancement — and you can imagine what we could do with equipment for vocational training," he said.

One graduate has landed a job as a telephone operator, another as a meter repairman, he noted.

A three-month study of discrimination patterns in employment in the Baltimore metropolitan area will be launched within the next two weeks by Dr. Cleveland Chandler, head of the Economics and Business Department.

The analysis is a project of the city's Community Relations Commission and the Federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

The Board of Estimates approved CRS's request for $5,000 Wednesday to finance the study. The expenditure will subsequently be reimbursed by Federal funds.

David L. Glenn, CRC director, said the study is one of several being readied in select communities by the Federal EEOC to check the efficiency of the employer report forms as well as for employment advances of minority groups.

Dr. Chandler will be free to hire whomever he deems necessary for the three-month study.

Activists leader hits D'Alesandro

Walter Carter, an executive of the Activists for Fair Housing, has charged in a letter to City Council President Thomas D'Alesandro that his opposition to open housing legislation is an attempt to "manipulate others for political reasons."

The Activists, a group which has been fighting for open occupancy legislation, has repeatedly clashed with D'Alesandro, an announced mayoralty candidate, over the housing issue.

Carter charged that on three occasions the City Council backed down on opportunities to remove racial blocks in housing and that D'Alesandro, by refusing to join Mayor Theodore R. McKeldin in an attempt to get a measure through the Council, has shown that he has no sense of responsibility to the "400,000 black Baltimoreans" in the ghettos.

Carter also warned D'Alesaandro that the colored community is becoming united with the liberal elements in Baltimore and that the public will not "tolerate" a segregationist city hall.

"An all-white discriminating city-wide ticket cannot be stuffed down the throats of alarmed and alert voters of Baltimore," Carter said.

"Your unreasonable opposition now can only be attributed to your support of George P. Mahoney, and all the evils he advocated," the veteran civil rights leader said.

D'Alesandro has taken the position a vote on the Mayor's bill now would be futile.

VIET AND BACK — Yeoman 3C Gregory McCrimon recently returned to Baltimore after nearly a year of naval support activities in Vietnam. The 1964 City College graduate who is due an October discharge, expects to attend Maryland State College.
