Commercial Credit new downtown unit

The largest firm headquartered in Maryland, Commercial Credit Company and subsidiaries, with capital and surplus of over 340 million dollars, today added its voice to the chorus of confidence in downtown Baltimore.

Commercial Credit Corporation, one of the company's largest subsidiaries, opened a luxuriously appointed office in the Charles Center Theatre Building at 13 W. Baltimore Street to provide personal financial services for people who work in the downtown area.

The company's subsidiaries have more than a 1,000 offices throughout the United States and Canada. The opening of this new location will make it the 17th office serving the Baltimore area.

CEREMONIES MARKING the opening of the office also served as commemoration of the 55th anniversary of the day Commercial Credit Company started in business in Baltimore on June 12, 1912.

Alexander E. Duncan, 89, founder of the company, joined with Mayor Theodore R. McKeldin and other city and state officials in cutting a three-foot-high anniversary cake.

Also present at the opening were Alden N. Willis, president, and other members of the board of directors.

"Our opening of this unique office, and our inauguration of this new personal financial service for people who work in the downtown area is the clearest testimony to our faith in the revitalization of downtown Baltimore," said John Sheehan, president of Commercial Credit Corporation, the subsidiary responsible for operating the new office.

MAYOR McKELDIN expressed the city' gratitude to Commercial Credit Company for its vote of confidence in the renewal of downtown Baltimore.

"It is far-sighted, civic minded firms like yours that will make the difference in what we are doing here in Charles Center, and in all of Baltimore," he said.

And this day, more than ever,
