IN MEMORIAM

Important Fair Housing Case

Although it has attracted little attention, a case the Supreme Court will decide in the session which opened Monday could have as widespread an impact as its 1954 school opinion.

The suit was brought by Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Lee Jones, a St. Louis bondsman, charging the Alfred H. Mayer Co., with discrimination in its refusal to sell them a house in the concern's St. Louis County development.

The couple bases their complaint on the Civil Rights Act of 1866, which clearly states "all citizens of the United States shall have the same right . . . as is enjoyed by white citizens . . . to inherit, purchase, lease, sell, hold and convey real and personal property."

The case reached the nation's highest tribunal because the Eighth Circuit U.S. Court of Appeals held the 1866 law applies only to state action and does not cover private housing transactions.

But Mr. and Mrs. Jones, who have won the legal support of the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing, disagree.

They contend, with considerable merit, that the Act does cover the kind of discrimination they experienced, in that the Mayer Co., does business only with the consent of the State of Missouri, and performs state action in zoning property and constructing highway approaches.

More importantly, they point out that recent decisions of the Supreme Court have recognized that the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Amendments give Congress authority to prohibit conspiracies by private persons that deny individual rights.

Housing discrimination, Mr. and Mrs. Jones insist, constituted such a conspiracy.

With all the present furor about fair housing and the stubborn refusal of Congress to act in this area, it would be ironic indeed if the Supreme Court decides a good and sufficient law has been lying dormant on the books for more than a century.

Rusk Answers The Question

"But would you want your daughter to marry one?"

For generations that was supposed to be the question designed by segregationists to stump any non-conformists who might express sympathy for the plight of black Americans.

The question was never revelant. Today it has become obsolete.

Secretary of State Dean Rusk passed the test with flying colors, when he flew to Stanford, Calif., to give the hand of his only daughter, Margaret, in marriage to one Guy Gibson Smith.

Mr. Rusk and his family not only proved that they had completely outgrown the racial inhibitions of their native Cherokee County, Georgia, but had reached the sophisticated world plateau of indifference to skin color.

Margaret's marriage made the front pages of most of the nation's press, only because she had chosen as her life's companion a man of a different race.

That it did proves that too many white Americans talk glibly about Christianity and brotherhood, but don't really believe in it.

Fifteen years ago Finance Minister Stafford Cripps' youngest daughter married an African and the event caused no raised eyebrows or snide remarks in Great Britain. A lot of Americans haven't grown up yet.

Inviting The Undertaker

Evidence can no longer be doubted that the great majority of lung cancer deaths are due to cigaret smoking, the British Medical Journal warns in its current issue.

English medical researchers says the relationship of smoking to chronic bronchitis has been well documented. Further, evidence continues to mount that cigaret smokers of both sexes are more liable to coronary artery than are non-smokers.

The doctors also say it is now beyond dispute that those with sufficient will power to stop smoking immediately reduce the risk.

Federal law compelling cigaret manufacturers to label their products as injurious to health has not produced the desired results. Since passage of the law, the number of smokers has increased, not lessened. Obviously more stringent legislation is needed.

The British health minister is now seriously considering proposals to legally limit the sales promotion of cigarets. Though opposed by the tobacco industry, Congress may find it necessary to take similar steps.

British medical authorities are now agreed that the smoking of tobaccoo and especially cigarets, causes "death and disability on a scale reminiscent of the epidemic disease of earlier centuries."

Since it is clear now that the people are unable to voluntarily halt this scourge of humanity, it becomes imperative that the government step in and do the job.

Art Pitzer Flubs Again

When the North Carolina State Fair opens October 9 in Raleigh, neither the Ku Klux Klan nor the NAACP will be permitted to operate booths.

That is the decision of Arthur Pitzer, manager of the fair, who revealed that the reactionary John Birch Society will be allowed to pollute the air with its segregationist philosophy.

The fair management drew angry protests and a civil rights boycott last year for giving the Klan an opportunity to spread its racist poison via a blaring loud speaker. The boycott resulted in a sharp drop in attendance and spread alarm among the fair's sponsors.

In announcing that the Klan would be barred this year, Manager Pitzer flubbed again by stating that the NAACP, which had never requested a booth, would also be barred.

Any person so dense that he can't distinguish between the lawless record of the Ku Klux Klan and the legal approach of the NAACP has no business holding an official position in North Carolina, even as manager of a five-day fair.

Prep Sports Face Test

Backed by the NAACP's Legal Defense and Educational Fund, two Tampa, Fla. students have filed a suit that could end segregated athletic events in Dixie.

The suit by David G. Walker Jr. and Anthony C. Harrts asks the U.S. District Court to enjoin the white Florida High School Activities Association and the colored Florida Inter-Scholastic Athletic Association from sponsoring segregated competitions in junior and senior high schools.

The two football players also ask the court to order the associations to amend their charters to allow integrated activities and to meet together and plan athletic schedules along integrated lines.

Professionally, and more and more at the college level, integration in the field of sports has proved a strong force in breaking down barriers to respect and goodwill between the races.

Dixie audiences have accepted integrated professional and college teams and they will do the same at the junior and senior high school level.

There is no reason why there should be colored and white leagues operating on the old dual standards.

Schools have been desegregated and athletic events should be also.

A victory in this suit would not only affect Florida schools but Dixie schools as a whole and should prove a major step forward in the national goal of equal opportunity for all.

Afro Credo

I measure a newspaper not in buildings, equipment and employees — those are trimmings.

A newspaper succeeds because its management believes in itself, in God and in the present generation. It must always ask itself —

Whether it has kept faith with the common people;

Whether it has no other goal except to see that their liberties are preserved and their future assured;

Whether it is fighting to get rid of slums, to provide jobs for everybody;

Whether it stays out of politics except to expose corruption and condemn injustice, race prejudice and the cowardice of compromise.

The AFRO-AMERICAN must become a bi-weekly, then a tri-weekly, and eventually, when advertising warrants, a daily.

It has always had a loyal constituency who believe it honest, decent and progressive. It is that kind of newspaper now and I hope it never changes.

Wilkins Speaks • By Roy Wilkins

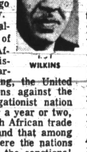
Hard-headed Lesson From Dr. Banda

The news that the Union of South Africa, home of apartheid, and the black African nation of Malawi will enter into full diplomatic relations is bound to confound the American vocal mass-terminds who believe that the white and black races should go their ways separately.



ROY WILKINS

There has been almost continuous talk of boycotting South Africa. After lengthy discussion and much parliamentary arm-twisting, the United Nations voted sanctions against the most adamant segregationist nation in the world. But after a year or two, it was found that South African trade was on the increase and that among her best customers were the nations supposedly supporting the sanctions!

It now comes to light that some of the very black African nations which have demanded a boycott are doing business with "the enemy." South Africa's trade with black African nations has steadily expanded since 1963. In that year black countries bought $281 million from South Africa. Two years later the figure had risen to $358 million — a very substantial advance of 37 percent.

Trade thicker than blood

During this period Black African nations were calling for open war against South Africa. In fact, both Britain and the United States were urged to declare war. Yet the estimate is that 17 of the 39 black African countries have been trading with South Africa. Apparently blood, though thicker than water, is not as thick as the lines of trade.

South Africa does have a hateful racial policy. It also has a land rich in agriculture and minerals, including gold and diamonds. Through its iron control over its black majority, it has a society in which it is said many white women go from birth to death without having done any work with their hands.

The demand for semi-skilled and skilled labor is forcing a very slow and very tiny change in racial-economic policies. Some few types of work hitherto limited by law to whites are being opened a little to blacks because the supply of whites is exhausted and the work must be done. After all, the rate of profit is among the highest in the world — 27 percent.

Trade with S. A. continues

In spite of the apartheid policy (which encompasses much more humiliation than physical segregation), nearly 20 black African nations have not been outraged enough to cease trading. Now comes Malawi with an exchange of ambassadors. Said Dr. Hastings Banda, president of Malawi:

"While they are criticizing me for trading with South Africa openly, they themselves are trading with South Africa secretly. In my view, the policy of boycotts and shouts has failed."

The establishment of diplomatic relations between these two African nations comes at a time when black Americans are being told by a noisy minority to sever all relations with the white world. Unquestionably, black Americans lag behind other Americans, but their situation is not rooted in government policy and laws, as well as in the really united and fanatically determined white South African opinion.

Armed with a declared national policy in our favor, even though there are gaps in its execution, we can secure reforms.

They soft pedal epithets

Black African trade with the environment of the hated apartheid policy suggests that the black nations recognize the necessity of interaction between nations and races. Nothing is as simple as a slogan. The black traders, faced with the facts of survival and growth, soft pedal the epithets.

Here at home, the same hard lesson is applicable to the predicament of a minority of 20 million blacks among 180 million whites. Our various Black Power groups might well ponder the practicality of Dr. Banda of Malawi, a man too occupied with the life and welfare of a nation to waste time in useless racial tantrums.

To Be Equal • By Whitney M. Young Jr.

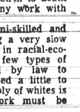
He Sees Signs A Sleeping Giant Is Awakening

There are signs that a sleeping giant is awakening. I'm talking about the immense power of nongovernmental institutions to use their many billions of dollars of economic power to help cure the racial and urban ills of America.



WHITNEY YOUNG

In the past, everyone looked to Washington. Business said that putting money into slums was too risky, religious and nonprofit groups said that such action didn't concern them, and local governments said they just didn't have the cash, although that didn't prevent them from finding it for other causes.

So it was up to the federal government. But its response was inadequate. It ended some forms of legal segregation, but in matters like housing it failed to make discrimination illegal or to provide an adequate supply of low-cost housing. As a result there are over 7 million dilapidated homes and apartments in America.

Private industry needed

The big lesson here is that the federal government can't do the job alone. Building decent housing for all needs the cooperation of private industry, nonprofit groups, and government, all working together. In the past month a beginning has been made in this direction.

America's huge insurance industry announced that it would invest $1 billion, mostly in low and moderate cost housing projects in slum neighborhoods. The government will insure their investment, guarding them against losses in what has always been a risky investment area. Without such government help it would be nearly impossible to get those private dollars into low-rent housing construction.

In a little more than a year, 1,000 moderate income families will move into the first of the buildings which will be constructed by the insurance industry. As part of its share in the pledged billion dollars, the Prudential Insurance Company will build a cooperative apartment house on the edge of the Newark ghetto.

Catholic Church takes part

Nonprofit groups also are beginning to take part in the revival of private interest in decent housing. The Roman Catholic Archdiocese of Newark has announced that it will sponsor new housing and rehabilitation programs in several northern New Jersey cities.

But this is more than a bricks and mortar plan. Recognizing that many low-income families need help in many areas and that a decent home won't solve all their problems, the Archdiocese plans to provide special help for tenants.

They will help furnish and decorate the new home, and will provide guidance in educational, economic, medical, and other needs. Such services are desperately needed. They can help create the sense of community which the typical barracks-type of low income project destroys.

The importance of these planned projects is that they show that business, religious, and civic leaders are coming to realize that they have an important stake in the cities, and that they must do something about the explosive urban conditions which threated America's future.

Can't be answered by guns

After this summer's riots many people called for repressive measures and police action. But the creative people in leadership roles understood that the cry from the ghettos cannot be answered by guns, but by action to end poverty and poor living conditions.

The Catholic housing plans in New Jersey, for example, grew out of Archbishop Thomas A. Boland's visit to Newark's riot area, and his decision to involve the church in the social and economic problems of the poor. And enlightened leadership of the business community has responded with the insurance industry's housing commitment, the formation of the Urban Coalition of city, business, labor religious and civil rights leaders, and with expanded work with groups like the Urban League to open job opportunities.

So some first steps have been taken. Seen in the context of the desperate need for massive help in jobs and housing, these first steps may seem feeble. But so are a baby's first steps, yet babies later walk and run.

If action is followed by that of other private groups, and if government at all levels responds with similar action, we may yet see the end of ghetto condition. Those are big "if's" but I have confidence that the people with the power and the money to change things are aware of their responsibilities.

Advice To Ali From Inside

TAMAL, Calif. — Please, someone, tell my friends not to follow in the footsteps of Pvt. Lockman, Muhammad Ali and me by inviting arrest and penitentiary detention. A growing number are doing this.

These people probably "know" that they will be released, just as I did, but statistics are against them. Only three out of every 100 felony trials end in acquittal, Perry Mason notwithstanding.

My admiration for Adam Powell is growing because he already knows the score and refuses to heed the taunts of those who say he is afraid. The only pity is that he didn't fear Esther from the start.

True, too many of us are afraid when we should not be, but almost as many are fearless when we should be apprehensive. It is hard to win when you are foolishly brave and hard to lose when you are intelligently fearful.

I used to think my bold and defiant antics were brave and courageous, but I now know I was being a great big fool. Mississippi was only calling a spade a spade when it packed me off to its Whitfield bloddy bin.

The pen convinces me that we brave fools are a dime a dozen.

Fight for freedom needs rebirth

NEW YORK — I think it is high time that more of our middle class citizens drop their "above the battle" role and become involved with the struggles of our masses. We are allowing people who speak for a few and who project ideas and philosophy not shared by the majority, to take the stage and dominate the spotlight.

I believe there are many of us of the middle class who can be as militant in the cause of our people as anyone else. I consider it my duty to be so. The Good Lord has showered blessings on me and this country and its people, white and black, have been good to me.

I have been very fortunate and I realize that I do not have the same problems as the masses of our people. But no matter how rich or famous I might become, no matter what luxuries or special privileges I might achieve, no matter how many powerful friends I might make, I would never be the man I want to be until my huffblest brother, black and white, becomes the man he wants to be. So I must be involved in our fight for freedom.

I'd like to see many other middle class soul brothers become so involved. It is not a simple or easy step. It might even be a dangerous one in view of the lunatics and fanatics lurking on the sidelines. I have been writing and speaking out about violence, about separate black societies and about certain interpretations of Black Power with which I do not agree.

I shall continue to write and say what I believe. I don't seek to be anyone's martyr or hero, but telling it like I think it is —that's the only way I know how to be me.

JACKIE ROBINSON

Papa Doc's Antoine

When Dr. Francois Duvalier, the life-term President of Haiti, sends his car to Cruix des Bouquets to fetch Antoine the voodoo priest to the palace in Por.-au-Prince, he is not doing anything so far different from what other high-muckety-mucks do as the latter might imagine. If he were in Washington he would be reading up on the latest public opinion polls to see how George Romney is doing at the moment. Antoine is the true embodiment of everything that's pertinent; he gets around.

Not that Papa Doc, as the President is familiary called, is worried about elections. He has that little annoyance licked. He is worried about rivals, which is what the conference with Antoine gets round to after all the protocol or palaver about Damballah, the god who looks like a snake and lives in a tree, and Baron Samedi, the evil zombie who wears top hat and tails.

It might well have been the practices of the life political which prompted the saying that the more it changes the more it is the same thing. In common with heads of state generally, Duvalier likes to keep his ear as close to tht ground as he can get it. Like them also, he has no doubt had occasion to conclude that grass roots are where you find them.

Bouquet from history buff

New Haven, Conn. — I think the AFRO is wonderful. I particularly like the History Quiz feature. The one showing the positive rewards reaped through riots was especially instructive.

Of course, all this business goes back about 3,500 years to the time of Moses. When his sister Miriam complained openly of his marriage to an Ethiopian woman, God made her a leprous albino and cast her out of the wilderness camp for a week.

CHARLES MILLER

Fast and prayer urged

WINONA LAKE, Ind. —I am heart broken over the fact that my people have caused so much suffering, and agony of spirit for the colored American since the time he and his people were illegally kidnapped from Africa's shores until the present. As I was praying about this the Heavenly Father sent a message.

As Queen Esther saved her nation from complete destruction by announcing a three-day fast and prayer, so He would save our colored people from the spirit of prejudice if they would do as Queen Esther did.

Instead of fasting three days in succession, suppose we decide upon three Sundays in succession, beginning with the second Sabbath of October.

Now, the best way to begin such a prayer is to search our hearts, making this a day of repentance, confession of sins, making apologies and restitutions. This is an age of rush; arrange matters so that you will have plenty of time for prayer. Deny yourself everything that is not needful. Do not run with a crowd.

Seek to be alone with God. Talk less. Decide fully that you are done with all sin forever by God's help. Avoid every hindrance to your communion with the Almighty.

"Then shall ye go and pray unto me and I will hearken unto you; and ye shall seek me and find me when ye shall search for me with all your heart." Jer. 29:12, 13.

The next step will be hard but you can make it. Refuse to retaliate; that would only make matters worse. The Bible says, "Forgive and ye shall be forgiven." Luke 6:37, "Vengeance is mine, I will repay, saith the Lord." Romans 12:19.

God can punish your enemies better than you, while you keep a clear conscience.

Pray for the rioters that they may see that they are not only hurting themselves and working against their own interests, but they are bringing into disrepute the multiplied thousands of fine, respectable, law-abiding colored citizens.

(MRS.) E. E. SHELHAMER

Just one race—human

BROOKLYN, N.Y. — Re Dean Rusk's daughter's marriage: The Bible and science are in accord with the fundamental principle of the unity of mankind as expressed in the universal concept of the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man.

There is but one race, the human race. Father Divine and good Pope John preached this over a million times. To all enlightened persons there is do validity to the idea of marrying out of one's own race; despite what Nazi Rockwell and his technicolor "soul-brothers" might wish to believe.

Ku Klux Klan fanatics and Black Power bigots are preaching a dangerously stupid, destructive, and divisive philosophy. Since there is but one race, it is utter nonsense to believe that certain human beings have an inmate monopoly on vice or virtue, and this based on pigmentation. This is the epitome of arrogant, asinine and imbecilic racism.

The Druid Hill Avenue YMCA "Pee Wee Club" will begin its fall session Saturday, Oct. 14.

The Pee Wee program, for boys five to eight years old, meets on Saturday afternoons from 1:00 to 4:00, and offers swimming, singing, archery, cook-outs, trips, hikes, crafts, and skills for youngsters.

One mature counselor is assigned to each group of eight boys, according to Donald A. Wright, youth director at the Branch.

Savings Certificates earn an EXCELLENT YIELD at Loyola Federal

Savings Certificates are available in amounts of $12,000 or more for a term of six months and earn the maximum dividend allowable under Federal Home Loan Bank Board regulations.

Also, Loyola continues to offer Savings Certificates of $1,000 to $11,000 for a period of one year, which earn an excellent return.

On both of the above plans, QUARTERLY dividends are mailed at the regular passbook rate and additional dividends are paid when the Certificates mature. If funds are withdrawn before the end of one year, the basic passbook rate is applicable.

Funds invested on or before October 10th earn dividends for the entire month.

Coppin State adds 20 to faculty

The opening of the fall semester has brought 20 new faculty members to the campus of Coppin State College. Six of these are in positions added this year. The campus laboratory school also has four new members on its faculty.

Dr. Carolyn Easterbrook has been appointed as Coppin's liaison professor to work with Project Mission, a Ford Foundation project for training teachers of disadvantaged children. Dr. Easterbrook was graduated from Youngstown University, earned her Master's at the University of Wisconsin and her doctorate at Wayne State University. She came to Baltimore from Detroit this summer.

Dr. Virgie Camper has joined the college faculty after teaching in the college laboratory school. Dr. Camper is a specialist in the field of training teachers of reading on the elementary level.

Miss Elleanor Stafford, also a specialist in the field of reading but on the secondary level, has returned to Baltimore from Illinois to join Coppin's faculty. She earned her Bachelor's Degree at Sweet Briar College for Women, and her Master's at the University of Virginia.
