Public can speak out on ConCon at BJC session

By DR. SIDNEY KOBRE
News Bureau, Baltimore Junior College

"The forum you are planning to inform people about the proposed constitution is a worthwhile idea, and I urge all women to come and bring their husbands on Saturday morning."

So said Mrs. Roxie Anne Richardson, of 4100 Fairview Ave., a member of the League of Women Voters, in discussing the Symposium on the Constitutional Convention to be held at the Baltimore Junior College at 10 a.m. to 12 noon on Oct. 21.

The forum will be held in the college's Campus Theatre, 2901 Liberty Heights Ave. The public is welcome.

• • •

MRS. RICHARDSON was but one of the many women our staff interviewed about the evenet which seeks to arouse interest and tell people about the century-old constitution and why it is outdatd. All of those we spoke to expressed a strong interest in the forum.

They included: Mrs. Royston Scott, 3417 Denlyn Rd.; Mrs. Dora Caldwell, 3540 Winchester Rd.; Mrs. Faye Contee, 3407 Winchester Rd.; Mrs. William Daniels, 2008 Ruxton Ave.; Mrs. Clarence Henderson, 3415 Cedardale Rd. and Mrs. Goria King, 3412 Ellamont Rd.

The Maryland Constitution is 100 years old.

It has been amended 206 times.

It is a patchwork job, designed for an age of small towns and farms. Yet we are living in the 20th century, an era of metropolitan life, undreamed of by those who wrote the constitution in the 1860's.

• • •

WE HAVE hundreds of problems growing out of the metropolitan life. They are concerned with law-enforcement, health protection, public education and water supply and transportation.

The proposed constitution is expected to deal with those modern today problems. And readers of the AFRO-AMERICAN will have the opportunity to learn at first-rand how the new constitution will operate, how it will affect the lives of our children for a generation to come.

The first session will begin with a talk by President Harry Bard, of BJC, who is a delegate to the Annapolis convention. He will give an overall view of the old constitution and show its inadequacies and how the delegates are seeking to modernize the document.

The second speaker will be E. Dale Adkins, a delegate and vice chairman of the Committee on the Executive Branch, who will discuss the reorganization of that body.

A panel of citizens will then cross-question the principal speakers. On the citizens panel will be Mrs. Edmind Glaser, representing the League of Women Voters and Delegate John Byrnes, and Harold Stokes of the BJC faculty.

The audience will be encouraged to fire questions at either the delegates or the panel.

Principals, instructors and students at Douglass, Forest Park Senior and Junior High and Coppin State College will attend and report to their classes next week on the arguments at the forum.

Proclamation makes this 'NAACP Week'

Mayor Theodore R. McKeldin has proclaimed Oct. 15-21 as "NAACP Week In Baltimore."

In a ceremony held in his office, Mayor McKeldin said the NAACP "is a nationwide integrated organization composed of men, women and children, who in good faith seek to lawfully examine human relationships, and, where there is racial discrimination, seek to correct it through the courts."

He noted that the local NAACP "has initiated many cases which have been carried up to the highest courts, establishing such fundamental rights as equal teachers' salaries, integrated parks, playgrounds and beaches, and protection of citizens against unlawful entry of police on their premises without a warrant."

• • •

THE CHAPTER, headed by Dr. Lillie M. Jackson, veteran rights fighter, is currently conducting its 32nd annual membership campaign with a goal of 15,000 members.

Jerry Guess, of the national NAACP staff, who is conducting the local campaign, was among those present for the issuance of the proclamation.

Weekly report meetings are held Tuesday nights at the Sharp Street Church Community House, Dolphin and Etting Sts.

In issuing a proclamation to that effect, Mr. McKeldin declared:

"Health is the most priceless possession of every man, woman and child, and good health is one of our most valuable resources and one vital to the safety, growth, productivity and progress of our city and each individual in it.

"Maintaining or improving public health is a constant, high-priority goal and many members of our community health team, by working together and with continued public support, have made immense strides in the control of veneral disease through education and preventing measles through immunization thus protecting and improving public health and assuring that health care services are available to all.

"Medicine's endless quest for new discoveries and methods to make life freer from serious disease and rehabilitation of the ill and injured is reaching toward even greater heights, and emphasis on health care services is so predominant today that the "health services industry" is well on its way toward becoming the nation's largest single civilian employment field.

"One of every 10 high school graduates must be attracted every year for years to come into medicine and its allied fields to meet growing demands in providing medical care services and we must strive to encourage our community to have the vision and the essential, continued coordinated teamwork and planning necessary to meet and copy with tomorrow's health needs so that the highest level of health protection and total health care services will be available to all.

"Now, therefore, I, Theodore R. McKeldin, mayor of the City of Baltimore, do herehy proclaim the week of Oct. 15 to 21, as "Community Health Week" in Baltimore, and call upon the City Medical Society, allied health professions, public and private health organizations and agencies, civic organizations and public schools to join in its observance to demonstrate to the people of Baltimore how they're teaming up for better health and to increase public awareness of the many health facilities and services available at the community level to enrich the lives of all of us and those who will follow us."

'Community Health Week'

In an effort to promote the "most priceless possession of every man — good health," Mayor Theodore R. McKeldin has designated the week of Oct. 15 to 21 as "Community Health Week."
