'More in a soldier's life than fighting all the time'

By MIKE DAVIS
AFRO Correspondent

PHU CAT — Major Richard Maddox of Fayetteville, N.C. is an American soldier in Vietnam, but his assignment has little to do with actually fighting one of the strangest wars in U. S. history.

Major Maddox is a sub-sector advisor to a village 200 miles north of Saigon.

He plays an important part in the U. S. pacification program aimed at winning the respect of the thousands of Vietnamese that live in rural areas.

"WE MOVED right in there with the people," Maddox commented. "We built a small building and carried weapons the first few weeks we were there.

"But now we don't need our weapons any more. We eat with the people, attend their funerals, play games with them and even get haircuts from the local Vietnamese barbers.

"When we first arrived at the village they didn't have any electric power, so we brought in a large generator and have been able to keep them supplied with lights.

"We have a medic who has given all of the villages shots and other medical treatment.

"They like us and they feel that they don't want the Viet Cong to return to the village and disrupt the peace again."

• • •

THE VILLAGE of Phu Cat is protected by regular Vietnamese soldiers who have formed a security perimeter on the outside of the village

Maj. Maddox and his six men are the only Americans in the village.

"We have to win the respect of the people," he said, "because we are out there all alone and it's common knowledge that the VC can kill us any time they want to.

"We've been so good to the people that the village chief will warn us whenever VC are in the area.

"When I want to go to town to get provisions or other supplies all I have to do is tell the village chief.

"He will send some of his men out into the village to see if it's safe for us to go, and then he will send body guards with us.

"At night we sit around his house trying to learn Vietnamese and smoking American cigarettes with him."

ADVISORY TEAMS, like the one that Maddox commands, are spread all over the rural sections of Vietnam. Their efforts are directed toward dispelling any fear of the Viet Cong the villagers might have.

These teams are important because once the village is secure the people in them can begin to receive the necessary help in building adequate homes and establishing a better standard of living.

"WHEN I FIRST got there," Maddox said, "the villagers would come up to me and pinch my arm. They were amused because I was darker than they are. They would feel my arm and then feel their own and say, same, same'."

Maddox said that after the people in his village became used to the soldiers being there, life in the town became a pleasure.

"I like it here," he said. "I would rather be here than out on a military post.

"I really feel like I am getting something accomplished and helping the people to live better lives.

"And it proves that there is more to a soldier's life than just fighting all of the time. Few people get to know the positive side of military life.

"I feel that my work in the Phu Cat sub sector is one of the most important jobs in Vietnam," he concluded.

Stokely won't surrender passport

WASHINGTON — When State Department officials caught up with Stokely Carmichael in Conakry, Guinea they asked for his passport but the former SNCC leader refused to surrender it.

Carmichael has been visiting in President Sekou Toure's country for the past month.

Officials said that if he had turned over the passport, it would have been invalidated except for a return trip to the United States.

Afro's Mike Davis returning home

Mike Davis, AFRO war correspondent in Vietnam, is due in the United States momentarily.

He has covered in stories and photos the activities of our servicemen since June 18. His travels took him to Saigon and to the battle zones.

En route home, Mr. Davis is stopping in Bangkok, Tokyo and Honolulu, where he will see troops in military hospitals.

OF HIS tour in Vietnam, Mr. Davis says: 'In a way, I am glad to be leaving Vietnam, but a little sad to be leaving the fellows here. I know I will miss them.

"The guys at the front are the ones who are really getting it. These fellows deserve all the play we can give them."

Mr. Davis' photos and stories, which he prepared in Vietnam, will continue to appear regularly in this newspaper.

Mrs. Elizabeth Murphy Moss, AFRO vice president, said this week: 'Mr. Davis has earned a good rest. He has kept AFRO readers abreast of activities of our servicemen and women in the Vietnam war. His graphic accounts have enlightened all of us and enabled us to get a clearer understanding about this war zone.

'In addition, Mr. Davis has been able to visit with dozens of servicemen whose parents supplied the AFRO with their names and addresses.

'His releases have reflected the sympathy he has for his fellowmen, and we are proud of him.'

Johnson-Mitchell discuss new bill

Plans, strategies and prospects for enacting of the pending civil rights bill to protect persons exercising their constitutional rights were discussed by President Lyndon B. Johnson and Clarence Mitchell, director of the NAACP Washington Bureau, at a White House Conference recently.

The bill is scheduled to be reported out of the Senate Judiciary Committee, Wednesday, Oct. 25 Mr. Mitchell said that the President expressed a strong desire to secure enactment of the Administration's measure without crippling amendments.

Slow Gains In Military Off-Base Housing Hit

By ART CARTER

WASHINGTON —Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara's determined efforts to eliminate discrimination in off-base housing for military personnel is making steady but slow progress.

The slow pace of the progress in this all-important area of military life is disturbing to many and is the target of much criticism. Most recent verbal attack on the off-base housing campaign came from the Action Coordinating Committee to End Segregation in the Suburbs, which has sparked the off-base housing drive in the Washington area.

CHARLES JONES, executive director of ACCESS, last week referred to Mr. McNamara's public statements on the campaign to end military housing discrimination as "a sick kind of word game for public relations purposes only."

Several weeks ago, a group representing the National Newspaper Publishers Association, called to the attention of Pentagon officials the fact that the off-base drive to end segregation in military housing was not going far enough.

They stressed that soldiers, particularly veterans in southern installations, were complaining daily about the difficulty in gaining proper housing within reasonable distances from their assigned bases.

PENTAGON OFFICIALS at the same time outlines what had been done and emphasized that Mr. McNamara was "unalterably opposed" to any practice which failed to provide equal opportunity for servicemen and their families, on and off base.

They stressed that Mr. McNamara was pursuing the problem in stages, seeking to work with states which had open housing laws first, then taking other areas as the situation demanded.

Such a policy, of course, leaves uncertain the time when the Defense Department will make a frontal attack on the problem in the Deep South. And this is the phase of the campaign which disturbs those fighting to eliminate segregation in all off-base housing for military personnel.

SO FAR Mr. McNamara has imposed off-limits sanctions around six bases in Maryland on rentals apartments and trailer courts which refuse to accept colored servicemen as tenants.

He has indicated that similar moves would be made in California where Brig. General William E. Ekman, national coordinator for Off-Base Housing Services for the Department of Defense, recently made a "familiarization visit.

Gen. Ekman spent a week in the Los Angeles-Long Beach and San Diego areas, visiting various installations, conferring with senior military commanders, state officials and realtors, but no decisions have been made on what DOD plans to do about the California situation. California, like Maryland, has an open housing law.

MR. JONES of ACCESS contends that "this represents no risk at all. They are taking the easiest way out" He insists that DOD take similar steps in the South, where surveys disclose that colored soldiers are the most dissatisfied with their housing.

ACCESS is seeking to organize a national protest group, hoping to put additional pressure on the Pentagon to focus attention on the problem in the South. Mr. Jones said they are eager to solicit the support of other civil rights organizations to follow through with the campaign, and to add to the list of Congressmen who have shown an interest in their stand.

Among Congressmen who have given support to ACCESS view on the problem are Senators Wayne Morse, D., Ore., and Edward Brooke, R., Mass.; and Representatives Gilbert Gude, R., Md.; John Conyers, D., Mich. and William F. Ryan, D., N.Y.

MEANWHILE, MILITARY commanders in several southern states, especially Georgia, have indicated that Dixie realtors may give in on the open housing controversy without strong pressure.

Currently, a quiet open housing program is under way in Dixie states, with base commanders and visitors from the Pentagon pointing out to realtors that the Pentagon may have to "restrict all military families from renting any apartment unit which is not open to all personnel, regardless of color.

Some success under this program has been indicated in Georgia, but survey results are incomplete and there is no way to tell the real effect until all the figures are tabulated.

GEN. EKMAN, who expresses the attitude of Mr. McNamara, admits DOD is moving cautiously with the campaign in the South.

"We have no plans to conduct any kind of crusade," he says, "but we are going to make sure that colored servicemen are given the same opportunities to rent off-post housing as whites.

High Court likely to pass fair housing law this year

WASHINGTON — (NPI) — The Supreme Court may make fair housing the law of the land this year, in the same way it outlawed segregated schools in 1954.

Just as a novel interpretation of the 14th Amendment to the U. S. Constitution brought the house down on Jim Crow in education, a 101-year-old Civil Rights Act may be invoked by judicial mandate, to require open occupancy.

The law was passed in 1866 to implement the 13th Amendment, banning slavery.

Housing segregation may be ruled unconstitutional on the basis of a clause in the Act, which declares, "All Citizens of the United States shall have the same right, in every state and territory, as is enjoyed by white citizens thereof, to inherit, purchase, lease, sell, hold, and convey real and personal property."

THE COURT itself was integrated, for the first time in history, by Thurgood Marshall, who could be expected to lean toward a ruling favoring open housing by court decree.

To be considered by the court is an appeal which contends that the 1866 law should be invoked to require open housing.

The appeal was filed by Joseph Lee Jones and his white wife, Barbara Jo, who were denied housing in a St. Louis suburb. The Justice Department may enter the case as a friend of the court.

THE 1866 LAW is still on the books — but subsequent court decisions have intended to violate its effect, except as a deterrent to slavery.

However, court decisions are reversible, as the Supreme Court's own 1954 ban on segregated schools shows.

The high tribunal, in that year, reversed an 1896 ruling (Plessy V. Ferguson) upholding "separate but equal" schools.

IN INVALIDATING the 1896 decision, the Supreme Court interpreted the 14th Amendment to require non-segregated schools. That amendment guarantees "equal protection of the laws" for all citizens.

Just as the court overruled a previous decision on school segregation, so might it do with previous rulings on the constitutionality of the 1866 Civil Rights Act.

And thus, the judiciary would have settled the open housing question, just as it handled the school segregation issue.

no claymore mines. And then the fellows are over in Vietnam, in the mud, the rain, fighting and dying for a war that many of them don't even understand.

Some will make it back. Some I'll see again in the United States.

A lot of them will never be back. They'll die 10,000 miles from home in the hot Asian sand of Vietnam.

What do you say to fellows like this when you leave them? How do you say goodby, to the men you have lived with, faced death with and learned to like for more than three months?

THE LIGHT WAY OUT

Perhaps here again the bit of humor, the jest, is the light way out.

Six soldiers had walked me to the plane. I had walked up the ramp, turned, forced a smile and said, "keep your powder dry, guys, and for God's sake keep your heads down."

"See you in the states they called back, see that we get some AFROs over here."

"We'll come back to see you as soon as we get back to the states," one of them called out as I entered the plane.

"You'd better," I answered, "or you ain't no good."

ONE LAST GOOD BYE

From the window on the left side of the plane I caught my last glimps of men in jungle green fatigues.

They waved goodby and I returned their waves with the traditional thumbs up salute.

The hostesses aboard the aircraft passed out warm towels.

I looked out the window again and waved one last goodby.

The pitch of the jet engines were ringing in my ears. In the ear of my mind I heard the loud blast of shells and automatic weapons fire. I thought about the men who would never leave Vietnam.

I looked out the window again as we began to taxi down the runway.

KEEP YOUR POWDER DRY

"Sorry I have to go fellows," I thought. "See you in the States, you bums. Hang tough. Keep your powder dry."

The jet raced down the airfield and lifted off into the rain-filled night.

For this reporter the war was over. He had dateline his last story out of Vietnam.

For many of the men he left behind, the war was just beginning.

For many of the others, it would all be over too soon.

Shuttlesworth attacks Senate probe committee

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — A civil rights leader has attacked a U. S. Senate committee's summoning of two Pikeville residents as a "revival of McCarthyism." He said it would be "laughable if it were not so tragic."

The Rev. Fred L. Shuttlesworth, president of the Southern Conference Educational Fund (SCEF), was referring to subpoenas served on Alan and Margaret McSurely at their home on Oct. 18. The couple works on the SCEF staff as organizers in the Southern mountains.

They were ordered to go to Washington to testify in connection with the McClellan Committee's investigation of recent uprisings in the nation's cities. They were told to bring records pertaining to meetings with leaders of SCEF, the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), and other civil rights groups.

MR. SHUTTLESWORTH said in a statement released through his Louisville office:

"With the subpoenaing of Al and Margaret McSurely, this committee is apparently implying that the cause of trouble in our cities lies with human rights organizations and the people who work for them. This is a revival of McCarthyism and would be laughable if it were not so tragic.

"The very fate and future of our country may depend on our finding leadership with the ability to understand the root causes of urban uprisings — the conditions that make life unbearable for millions of our people. If McClellan and his committee are unable or unwilling to understand these things, the Senate should withdraw its approval of this investigation and turn the matter over to people who recognize the crisis our nation faces and have the vision to propose solutions," he said.

Col. Campbell heads 31-man staff advising Vietnamese

By MIKE DAVIS
AFRO Correspondent

TON SON NHUT — Col. William A. Campbell, one of 16 colored colonels in the Air Force, is one of the chief advisors to the South Vietnamese military effort in Vietnam.

From his office near the Ton Son Nhut Air Field he is in constant contact with high ranking Vietnamese military officials.

He has been in the Air Force 25 years and has been in Vietnam six-and-a-half months.

"I haven't found this tour of duty to be too bad," he said. "I enjoy it very much, and I find that time passes very quickly over here."

COL. CAMPBELL has 31 people working in his office who assist him in military intelligence and Air Force operations.

He has a Vietnamese counterpart, also a colonel, and together they plan the goals and the objectives for the South Vietnamese air wing.

Col. Campbell is a graduate of Tuskgee Institute and has carried out assignments in Germany and Turkey.

Before coming to Vietnam he was assigned to the Pentagon.

LAST PHOTO of the Rev. Mr. and Mrs. C. Y. Trigg was made in April, 1967 by AFRO photographer on occasion of their 60th wedding anniversary. Mrs. Trigg died last week.

Mrs. C. Y. Trigg, 77 wife of minister

'She had cancer for two years . . . she died last Monday in Freedmen's Hospital in Washington . . .'

The Rev. C. Y. Trigg, Deale, Md., retired Methodist minister, was speaking of his wife, Mrs. Helen Lewis Trigg, 77.

Last April, the Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Trigg celebrated their 60th wedding anniversary.

Funeral services were held on Friday at Asbury Methodist Church in D.C. Burial was in Lincoln Memorial Cemetery.

BORN AND reared in New York, Mrs. Trigg was the daughter of Martha and Alexander Lewis. Her father was an Army career man, serving as sergeant with the Tenth Cavalry.

Mrs. Trigg was noted as a gracious and pretty woman who served as first lady in outstanding parsonages where her husband was assigned.

These included Baltimore's Metropolitan Church, and Salem Church in New York.

It was at Salem that the Triggs first met at the turn of the century. She was the church organist. The Rev. Mr. Trigg retired in 1955, and they moved to Deale, where he had built a home.

IN ADDITION to her husband, Mrs. Trigg is survived by a son, Charles Y. Trigg Jr., Washington; and a daughter, Mrs. Robert A. Johnson (Helen), Glenridge, N.J., wife of the Newark physician.

Another son, Frank, died last July.

Also four grandchildren, Karen and Robert Johnson, of Glenridge, N.J., Mrs. Douglas Seale (Carmen), and Mrs. William Norris (Ruth), both of Baltimore.

A sister, Mrs. Constance Holder, N.Y. also survives.
