McCarthy wants Uncle Sam to feed rebellious Biafra

WASHINGTON (PI) — Accusing the Administration of only "vain and futile gestures" to help the starving Biafrans, Sen Eugene J. McCarthy Friday night said the United States should demand that the United Nations immediately provide "mandatory" airlifts of food and medical supplies to Biafra.

Failing that, McCarthy said, the United States should make planes, personnel and supplies available to UNICEF and other relief agencies for mercy flights to the Breakaway province being blockaded by Nigeria.

"Every day of delay means that additional thousands die," McCarthy said in a statement "Action therefore is needed today."

THE MINNESOTA Senator, a candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination, also said the United States should "press for an immediate cease fire" in the war between Nigeria and the Biafrans and "urge our British allies to stop the killing."

"I say again that we should also be prepared diplomatically to back a division of Nigeria according to principles of self-determination, at least temporiarily, and until such time as the Beafrans and Nigerians may agree on a more permanent political settlement," he said.

McCarthy said voluntary agencies flying supplies to Biafra could not provide enough aid unless they got help from the United States or other governments.

* * *

"I THINK THAT it is intolerable that our own government has contented itself with what must be seen as vain and futile getures while human life is at stake," he said. "Political considerations have kept us from doing what is just and right.

"I call on our government to go immediately before the United Nations and ask for mandatory relief air lift of mercy to Bial," McCarthy said. "The world community through the United Nations should assume thatresponsibility.

But if such joint enterprises are not successful, the United States should itself quickly make available to UNICEF and any other relevant agencies the airplanes, helicopters, medicine, food and personnel required for effective relief now — or weeks hence when the death tolls will have grown larger."

Report charges Dr. Dolittle books guilty of white racism

The charge of white racism is levelled against Doctor Dolittle and his creator, Hugh Lofting, in an article appearing in the current issue of "Interracial Books for Children."

"The Story of Doctor Dolittle," is number one on the most recent list of Children's Best Sellers prepared by the New York Times.

The author of the article in Interracial Books for Children, Mrs. Isabelle Suhl, librarian of Elisabeth Irwin High School, an independent school in Manhattan, said that after carefully examining four of the most popular books in the Dolittle series, she concluded that Dr. Dolittle "is in essence the personification of the Great White Father nobly bearing the white man's burden."

* * *

SHE ADDED that Hugh Lofting, creator of the enormously popular character about 50 years ago, "was a white racist guilty of almost every prejudice known to modern white Western man, especially to an Englishman growing up in the last years of the Victorian age, when the British Empire was at its zenith."

Mrs. Suhl analyzes the stores and characters individual. The African characters, she alleges, "emerge as quaint, comic childlike figures with simple minds and ridiculous customs and funny-sounding names."

Even the animals, she said, are shown to feel superior to the African people.

THE ARTICLE describes Prince Bumpo, most famous of Lofting's African characters, as "his most outrageous creation." Citing the episode in "The Story of Doctor Dolittle," in which the black Prince Bumpo is turned white, Mrs. Suhl called it "replete with insults and ridicule."

She said the Doctor Dolittle apparently found it impossible to depict Africans, whether kings, princes or ordinary people, with dignity and genuine human qualities.

The article quotes the opinion of a colored reader on "The Story of Doctor Dolittle," who said: "In this book, black people are rejected as being extremely gullible, naive, basically ignorant and sertainly inferior."

* * *

WHILE MANY of Lofting's illustrations for his books are "delightful" Mrs. Suhl said, she belives that the drawings of Africans are as insulting and offensive as the text.

"They are nothing more than grotesque caricatures. In combination with the text, they serve no other purpose than to make children laugh at those silly, funny looking black people."

"If good books can help combat racial prejudice," Mrs. Suhl asks, "then it is not also true that some books can and do promote and foster racial prejudice? I think we not then be as willing to combat such books as we are to promote the others, even if those books have been called 'classic'?"

* * *

THE ARTICLE reports that the first Dolittle book is now in its 58th printing. All 12 titles are currently in print, several of them in paperback (Bell), and they have sold many millions of copies.

The series, published by Lippincott, is on many lists of books recommended for children, including one issued jointly by the National Congress of Parents and Teachers and the Children's Service Division of the American Library Association.

The same issue in which the Dolittle critique appears contains a report on a study of the low coverage of civil rights in "My Weekly Reader," issued by American Educational Publications, a division of the Xerox Corporation.

The study found that during the entire school year of 1966-67 the sixth grade "Reader" did not include a single news item on civil rights or any mention of
