HOMESTRETCH — Sandwiched between endless sessions of hard campaigning by members of the "Freedom Ticket"—Joseph C. Howard, Parren J. Mitchell, and Archie D. Williams — were relaxed social moments. Such was the case Thursday night at the Blue Crest North where a reception was held in Mr. Howard's honor, and shared by his running mates. At left Mr. Mitchell exchanges greetings with Roland Wheatley and John Hauswald, supervising salesman and president of the Hauswald Baking Co., respectively. At center Mr. Williams sought the votes of Mr. and Mrs. Thaddeus Thornton while Mr. Howard, right, talked politics with Alexander Burroughs and Milton B. Allen.

the black members on the governing board of the $14 million anti-poverty organization had resigned immediately after former director Parren J. Mitchell and assistant director Stanley D'Alesandro announced their resignations.

Mr. Mitchell is currently a candidate for Congress in Baltimore's 7th District.

"If I'm to head the CAA I'll have a big job on my hands with two top assistants gone. Everybody is getting off the ship, and I'm getting on," Mr. Carter note.

DIFFICULTIES IN organization were cited as the chief problems facing both Model Cities and the Community Action Agency.

Officials noted that CAA workers felt they were being pushed out of the picture by the $80 million five-year Model Cities effort.

Mr. Carter, referring to critics who are balking at his appointment to the post of director, said that "I don't plan to shuffle into the job."

Sources in the mayor's office have indicated that the administration plans to lobby heavily for the confirmation of Mr. Carter to the anti-poverty post.

MEANTIME THE AFRO has learned that Mayor D'Alesandro must soon name a new chairman and vice chairman for the Community Action Commission, the policy making arm of the poverty program.

The appointments have become necessary due to the reported desire of the current chairman, Albert Berney, to step down.

Vice chairman, the Rev. Robert T. Newbold, is leaving the city to accept a position as associate executive secretary in the Presbyterian Church General Assembly's Department of Ministerial Relations.

Favored by target area residents and CAA staff workers to become the new chairman is Dr. Oakley Saunders, an active member of the commission.

Aides to mayor D'Alesandro said Mr. D'Alesandro will consider the appointment when the garbage strike and connected issues are resolved.

mer executive director of the Community Action Agency, vying to become the first black representative from the 7th Congressional District.

And Archie D. Williams, veteran NAACP attorney seeking to win a seat on the People's Court Bench.

The net result of this new breed of politicians and this new brand of politics will be known later tonight after the official tally of vote returns is completed.

Most of the new breed of politicians caught up in this whirlwind of new politics, much like Mrs. White, have never participated in a campaign before.

Other volunteers have taken part in past campaigns and, though they take a more cynical attitude toward the current political race, are not daunted.

"I do it everytime I get a chance," said Mrs. Susie M. Carter, 1100 block N. Milton. "You've got to keep trying and now that more people are registered, we can go for the big ones.

"You never know how a man is going to turn out once he's in public office, but we have the right to try and find out."

THIS IS the way it has been going with the Young Crusaders.

Since then hundreds of young professionals, area college students and teenagers not yet old enough to vote have enlisted in the ranks of the door-to-door canvassers.

Residents solicited as block captains and poll workers.

Ministers committed themselves to Sunday morning speakers. Posters and signs have sprouted in some odd places.

Parades have winded through East and West Baltimore streets, and sound trucks have blared the deeds and words of the candidates.

"WE EITHER do it together, or it doesn't get done," said Larry Gibson, chairman of the Young Crusaders.

"Racism is a concept white America doesn't begin to understand — if it did we wouldn't have to challenge the 'sitting judge principle.'

"Black men would be appointed, and they would be re-elected just like other qualified sitting judges.

"Racism makes a very convenient slur for those who mouth meaningless platitudes and have no intention of making democratic concepts a reality for black people," the young attorney added.

Gibson has been working around the clock in the campaign. Other prominent leaders of the group include William H. Murphy Jr., a University of Maryland law student; Randall Carroll, who will be entering the University of Maryland in the fall.

David Allen, an accountant; and Leroy Carroll, an attorney.

IF THE "captains" of the Young Crusaders deserve plaudits, there are a number of "sergeants" whose diligence provide the proverbial backbone of the movement.

Regulars at the group's headquarters at 835 Gov St. are Marsha Cooper, a Morgan junior; Pat Powell, who will be entering Goucher this fall; Joyce Branch, a Morgan sophomore; Pat Feaser, a Morgan sophomore, and a host of others who handled the necessary clerical and paperwork.

Despite the youth and political inexperience of the Young Crusaders, there is a hard, concrete awareness of the significance of the Mitchell, Howard, Williams candidacies, and few illusions about the possibility of victory.

"We're out to win — to prove that we have the political muscle to elect our own to citywide and national office," said Billy Murphy.

"WHEN YOU see what's happening on the national political scene, you begin to recognize the importance of making our presence felt at the local level," he added.

Whatever happens in today's election there is a general feeling in the black community that this election represents a turning point in the political life of Baltimore.

Maurice, 12, were lucky enough to escape.

They are now being cared for by an aunt, Mrs. Florence Stanley, 713 Radnor Ave.

Mrs. Plowden, widow, and her children, according to Mrs. Stanley, a sister, had been living at the Alhambra address for three months.

Cause for the delay in funeral arrangements, Mrs. Stanley told the AFRO, is the inability of survivors to find resources.

"We all have families and this (the tragedy) has caused a new problem," Mrs. Stanley said.

The family would welcome any assistance and asked that it be forwarded to the Radnor Ave. address. Mrs. Stanley told the AFRO.

Mrs. Plowden was employed at a Bolton Hill Convalescing Home at the time of her death.

Other survivors are: Mesdames Alvera Small, Mildred King, Juania Glover, and Florence Cooper, sisters; and Warren Cooper, brother.

crime did not arise out of any "personal contact" between the victim and the assailants.

The victim's uncle added that Mr. Burgess had a good work record and was of good character.

Mr. Young's wife described Mr. Burgess as "the family pet," alluding to his frequent and welcome stays with several of the members of his immediate family, since his divorce.

She added that he was "well-liked" and had "never bothered anyone."

MR. BURGESS listed the home of Mr. Young as his legal residence.

Interviewed at the Glenwood Ave. residence, Mr. Young indicated that Saturday had been a day of considerable emotional pressure.

Enroute home at about ten a.m. Saturday from conferring with authorities over the death of his nephew, Mr. Young reports, he was driving through the 4700 block of Alhambra Ave. when he caught sight of a ball of flame moving along one of the overhead electrical wires into a house.

He stopped his car and ran to the house to warn the occupants.

The fire spread quickly, however.

Mr. Young, notified a few hours earlier of his nephew's death, stood by helplessly — on the perimeter of the intense heat of the two-alarm blaze — as Mrs. Gloria Plowden and her 13-year-old daughter died in the fire.

Gadabouting U.S.A.

by Lula Jones Garrett

One of the great things about this sort of work is the people you gather . . . particularly the friends of years' standing, who you occasionally flash across their minds take a moment out to let you know where they are and what they are doing. One such friend is Dr. Eva Jessye. Sometimes it is a couple of years between notes . . . but eventially one comes. I wait through the months, because I know she is doing something of high note . . . she always has!

Today a note came from Shreveport, La. And imagine what she has been doing? Becoming a movie actress. Last contact I had with Dr. Jesse was to answer the phone one day, two years ago, to find that she was in this (Baltimore) town, holding down a role in Porgy and Bess, at that time playing at Painters Mill.

Dr. Jessye's note this week says "right now in Shreveport, "THE SLAVES," starring Ossie Davis, Dionne Warwick and Stephen Boyd.

Others prominently featured are Robert Kiah Hill, Julius Harris, Aldine King and She says "My role is that of housekeeper on a plantation (1850), a coincidence. My name in the film is Julia, which, was my mother's name. I think it may bring me luck. Every time they call me, I see my mother's face. She died in 1922.

"The film exposes some of the evils of slavery and some scenes are startling. I do not know when it will be released and it is anybody's guess how it will be relic. Am happy to report ceived by critics and publ that in this, my first major movie acting role, the director H. Biberman, seems very pleased with my efforts, saying I am a beautiful actress. Of course I was musical director for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's 'Hallelujah' years ago, and several years ago was a featured But this is my most serious player in "Black Like Me." acting role. I like the movies and hope this will lead to other vehicles, though, of course, concert is my preferred field and where I am best known."

PEREGRINATORS: Ruth Jenkins of Washington, posting from San Juan, Puerto Rico, says Heaven can wait San Juan is paradise.'

Fay L. Harris, senior at Saint Augustine's College, Raleigh, N.C. has returned from Siena, Italy. Miss Harris participated in this summer's second Italo-American educational and cultural program in Siena sponsored by the North Carolina School of Arts at Winston-Salem and the Italian government

Miss Harris is a scholarship student of Professor Norman Farrow, baritone soloist of the Bach Aria Group of New York. At Saint Augustine's she received her voice training from Mrs. Norma Biggers, instructor in music at the college.

Both music teachers and Italian music critics have praised the singing of Miss Harris in her appearances in chamber music concerts in Siena.

In the spring, Miss Harris won second place in the North Carolina Competition for Metropolitan Opera, as the only colored participating.

Also at Saint Augustine's College, she was elected May Queen to reign in 1968-69.

She is the daughter of the Rev. Mr. and Mrs. T. Vincent Harris of Jacksonville, Fla., and the niece of Dr. and Mrs. Prezell R. Robinson.

Mrs. Charlotte Nash of North Wales, Pa., formerly of South Zone Park, N.Y., and Mrs. Bernice Williams, a reading consultant in the Richmond, Va. school system, are back on their home fronts. They vacationed in Kingston and Montego Bay in Jamiaca, and Nassau in the Bahamas. Mrs. Nash also visited her sister, Mrs. Evelyn Clay in Richmond, Va. and her brother, Otway Thompson in Washington.

MR. AND MRS JAMES BROOME of Philadelphia took sentimental journey on wedding anniversary.

Mr., Mrs. Broome on anniversary tour

GASTONIA, N.C. — When Mr. and Mrs. James Broome reached the 25th anniversary of their marriage, recently, they went a-visiting rather than have friends come, gift bearing, to a reception.

"Seeing many relatives and friends, we felt, would be more meaningful than having them bring us gifts to a party" said the couple. Their trip took them to the homes of relatives and friends in the Gastonia, Dallas and Hickory communities of North Carolina, Washington, D.C., and New York.

MRS. BROOME, the former Frances Glasco, daughter of the Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Glasco of Philadelphia, was director of music at Highland High School for five years. At the same time she organized the Mulitso Club, the 100-voice group, which was presented in programs throughout this area.

Mr. Broome, a plasterer and interior decorator, is the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. James B. Broome, Dallas natives, and relatives of Mrs. Eula Wellman and T.H. Broome, pfincipal of Ridgeview School, Hickory.

THE BROOMES are now residents of Philadelphia. He is an elder in the United Berean Presbyterian Church and is record examiner of Books of the Philadelphia Presbytery, which includes 193 churches.

He is also parliamentarian of the Johnson C. Smith University Alumni Association, and is employed as interior decorator for the Philadelphia Housing Authority.

Mrs. Broome is coordinator of music in Meade Elementary School, teacher of in-service courses for music teachers and cooperating teacher for music majors in Temple University, Philadelphia. She also directs the Berean Presbyterian Church Choir. She is also an active member of Phi Delta Kappa Sorority.

During their stay in North Carolina social courtesies were extended to them by Mr. and Mrs. Blair T. Humphrey of Dallas, Mr. and Mrs. Allegro Elder, Mr. and Mrs. R.C. Rozzelle, Mr. and Mrs. T. Jeffers, Mr. and Mrs. Dwight Costner, Mr. and Mrs. T.H. Broome, Mrs. Myrtle Pryor, Mr. and Mrs. Pohce de Williams of Gastonia.

THEY OVERCAME — The fact that the above are among the scores of teenagers headed for college is not news. But the fact that these 11, and 12 others not shown, are the products of a Philadelphia child placing agency makes very happy news. The 23 young people from Women's Christian Alliance, will attend a cross section of American colleges and universities this fall. Above, top row: Lewis Tatum, educational director for the Alliance. Miss Arlene Fountain who will attend Northeastern Community College; Mrs. Sarah S. Collins, Alliance director; second row: Frank Warner, Thompson's Academy, Boston, Mass.; Miss Alfreda Howard, Philadelphia Community College; Miss Betty Jean Wilson, Northeastern Christian College; Michael Johnson, Oklahoma Christian College; third row: Miss Nelly Young, Philadelphia Community College; Miss Karen Jones, Oklahoma Christian College; William Vincent, Yale University; Robert Lee Williams, Boston University; Lawrence Collins, Temple University; and Leonard Stevenson, Philadelphia Community College.

Educators ask text changes

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Back to school could mean pencils and books for parents, too, as they take the opportunity to find the gaps in their children's history books.

It's up to parents to let educators and publishers know about the lack of nonwhite history in school text books says the National Education Association's (NEA) Center for Human Relations.

BECAUSE HISTORY books have consistently ignored the role of the Negro throughout America's past, most parents are as ignorant as their children about Negro history.

How many parents know that Negroes were on the Mayflower, or that the first successful open heart surgery was performed by a colored doctor, or that a colored man organized the blood banks system during World War II.

"PREJUDICE DOES not suddenly break out like poison ivy," said Samuel B. Ethridge, the assistant executive secretary, at the center.

"It starts when a child opens up his first picture book and sees only affluent white children instead of pictures showing the wonderous variations of skin color and hair texture that make up the American scene."

SENATORS, LIKE Hugh Scott, R-Pa., are calling for a new commission on colored history and culture, and parents can do their own part by monitoring their children's books to see that they give a true picture of American life today, urged Ethridge.

Lincoln prof. back from tour

OXFORD, Pa. — Prof. Richard P. Stevens, chairman of the Political Science Department and assistant director of the African Language and Area Center of Lincoln University, near here, completed an exploratory survey of North African-Sub-Saharan African relations from July 26 to Aug. 20. During this period Prof. Stevens visited Morocco, Algeria, Tunisia, Libya and the United Arab Republic.

In Morocco Prof. Stevens noted the special bi-lateral relations existing between that country and Senegal.

In addition to his conversations with Moroccan officials responsible for African affairs, Dr. Stevens traversed the country to Marrakesh, one of the great centers in former centuries for the trans-Saharan route to the Niger River empires of Mali, Shangai and Ghana.

A LARGE range of political activities designed to bolster the role of Algeria in the African liberation movement were the focus of Prof. Stevens' interest in that country. Revolutionary movements from Portuguese-controlled Angola, Guinea and Mozambique received monetary and military training assistance.

DR. STEVENS had fruitful discussions in Tunisia with a black official responsible for African Affairs. Dr. Stevens noted a larger degree of significant black political involvement in Tunisia than in most other North African states.

THE LIBYAN Government provided official hospitality to Prof. Stevens during his entire one-week stay in that country and made it possible for him to travel extensively in the Kingdom.

IN A BRIEF Cairo visit, Dr. Stevens visited Africa House, the center for all political movements from Southern Africa.

Pursuing another long-time concern in Middle East affairs, Dr. Stevens spent two weeks in Jordan and Lebanon. In Jordan he surveyed at close hand the plight of the refugees and the status of Arab-Israeli relations.
