Gadabouting U.S.A.

by Lula Jones Garrett

Bright new star in the world of fashion designing is Karleen Downs Berthel, daughter of Concert Singer Marion Downs and member of Baltimore's widely known Jackson (NAACP family. And she's doing a unique thing in a new media—knitting. While her mother was studying in Italy, Karleen was in a convent in Milan. But her natural exuberance could not be pinned down by the Catholic Sisters . . . to keep her quiet during the regular siesta of the other children, she was given bits of yarn and taught to knit.

Now an eminent young designer with a shop of her own in Los Angeles (and a staff of young women of Oriental, Mexican and Jewish descent), she is being extolled for turning out coutour garments of exquisite design and precision execution.

Mrs. Bertel favors simple, chic lines, glamour trim of fine furs and jewels, and lavish utilization of crochets and knits but absence of gadgets and bangles, and pure genius of color combinations. Last week, in Chicago, socially prominent Mrs. Hazel Renfore Huggins, a close friend of Mrs. Downs, had a group in for champagne and hors d'oeuvres, to view Karleen's latest collection.

The designer lived in Baltimore as a child, following the death of the father, Karl Downs, then president of Sam Houston College, in Austin, Texas . . . later was taken to California, where Mrs. Downs and she made their home.

Antioch students get 'alternative'

YELLOW SPRING, Ohio — Because many black students at Antioch College school's curriculum failed to meet their needs; they decided "if you don't dig it provide an alternative."

The result is the Afro-American Institute; financed by a $10,000 grant from the college, the institute consists of more than a dozen courses for black students in the social sciences and humanities.

The AASI, according to its spokesman, is trying to develop an educational program that "deals with our problems so that we can use our minds and bodies to reconstruct our society — as teachers, lawyers, engineers, city planners and generally, architects of social change."

MISS McNEELY, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David McNeely of Charlotte, N.C. and Nelson E. Forney were married in Charlotte, on October 20th. The bride groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Verlor Forney of Belmont, N.C.
