Metal workers face court action

Dave Glenn, director of the Community Relations Commission, said that the concentrated attack on the apprenticeship policies of unions is now planned by the anti-discrimination group, but that all complaints received will be investigated.

"We don't have an affirmative action program in apprenticeship at this time," Mr. Glenn said.

The action against the Joint Apprenticeship Committee of the Sheet Metal Workers will consist of an order to be drawn up today (Tuesday), according to Mr. Glenn.

"The directive will come in the form of an order where we specify what we want done. If they do not respond, then the city solicitor will take them to court," the CRC director explained.

• • •

APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAMS have been traditionally closed to black workers making union membership all but impossible.

The Sheet Metal Workers Union is especially racially exclusive according to the tribunal of three commissioners that heard the case.

Charles Rush, co-director of the Urban League's Labor Education Advancement Program (LEAP), said that "we have had participation from every local union within the construction trades council with the exception of the sheet metal local union."

The case decided by the CRC arose out of three complaints citing discriminatory practice in testing procedure for qualification in entering the apprenticeship program of Local 122 of the union last May.

The complaints were filed by three young men who were denied admission on the alleged grounds of failing the entrance test.

The report described the union's selection procedure "by design, application and effect they facilitate racial discrimination. They are, therefore, illegal and must be replaced with nondiscriminatory and more objective procedures," CRC held.

• • •

THE DECISION of the CRC tribunal stated that the selection procedure of the local should be reviewed and changed to make it more objective, and that one of the three complaints should be immediately admitted to the apprenticeship program.

The other two applicants who had been discriminated against should be allowed to take the tests over again in a non-discriminatory manner.

Her listeners were amused as she told of the disconcerting things that can happen on the operatic stage, often accidentally.

However, Miss Tyler encouraged those who have talent and ability for opera, since as she stated, "American audiences are getting over their prejudice against black and white singers in love situations, which are no trouble when the operas are sung in other countries."

Her advice to singers in any field is to study the art songs first as a most valuable experience, and in concert as well as in auditions to select material with which one is comfortable and which is not too difficult.

Questions were asked about diet for singers, to which the gracefully slim artist replied, "Eat enough to give you the body strength. It is a matter of enough energy, and not weight, since a singer must often practice at least 20
