the seven colored servicemen reported to have been aboard the Pueblo. Others were not immediately identified.

"I am very happy about my son's return," Mrs. Hooper told the AFRO from her home at 176 Wylie St. She was not provided with a ticket to reunite with her son who is currently in San Diego, Calif.

"I would like to have gone, but they (Navy) would not pay my way," she emphasized.

Mrs. Hooper told the AFRO that Navy officials informed her that they had to give first priority to her son's wife and two children.

The wife, Mrs. Carolyn E. Lewis of 72 Ave. C., East Meadow, Nassau County, L.I., N.Y., and her two children were in Oakland when the Pueblo crewmen arrived from Korea. The Navy took care of travel expenses for Mrs. Lewis and her children.

It will be two to three weeks before Mrs. Hooper will be able to reunite with her son whom she has not seen for over a year.

She is waiting anxiously at her home and answering calls from friends and other well wishers.

The day the Navy announced the release of the men, Mrs. Hooper received a call from the mayor of the neighboring town of Bennettsville. The mayor expressed his happiness about her son's release.

Mrs. Hooper said she "stayed up all night" answering calls from people she knew and others she didn't know.

"I guess they were praying with me all along," she told the AFRO.

Mrs. Hooper who never gave up hope during her son's 11-month captivity in North Korea stated: "I knew everything was going to be all right and that they would all come out of it as long as the Lord was willing. You just got to pray when things get rough."

She looked forward to the twice-monthly visit of Navy officials who kept assuring her that everything possible was being done for the freedom of the Pueblo crewmen.

"We'll get them out some way," Navy officials assured her and Mrs. Hooper never doubted them.

"The Navy has become part of my family now," she told the AFRO this week following the arrival of her son in San Diego.

"I am very happy he is back and alive," stated Mrs. Hooper who lost a 20-year-old grandson in Vietnam early this year.

A widow, she is the mother of two adult daughters who live in New York.

Meanwhile, Navy officials in San Diego revealed eleven members of the Pueblo crew, including the skipper, Lt. Cmdr. Lloyd Bucher, were wounded when it was captured by the North Koreans nearly one year ago.

The 11, including one who subsequently died, and an undisclosed number of Pueblo crewmen who later suffered injuries when they were tortured by their Communist captors, will receive Purple Heart medals in a ceremony here this week.

In Washington President Johnson Tuesday ordered an "urgent investigation" of the beatings and threats suffered by the 82 crewmen.

"The President and the United States government are seriously concerned and are making an urgent investigation of reports received so far of the treatment of the crew," said a White House statement.

State Department officials said there was no idea of giving the results of the investigation to an international tribunal. About all that could be done, they said, would be to publicize the beatings and threats.

All of the crewmen were given thorough medical examinations upon their release and none seems to have suffered permanent physical damage, other than malnutrition and loss of weight.

The Navy said the crewmen will remain in San Diego until debriefing by intelligence officers is completed.

Debriefing of 34 of the 82 crewmen began Friday at The Balboa Naval Hospital.

The sole and exclusive purpose of the debriefing is to obtain intelligence information vital to the security of the United States.

Crewmen will be given liberty for the first time after the debriefing, but will not be allowed to leave San Diego. The debriefing is expected to take about two weeks.

Intelligence specialists were to question each man privately and then put all the information together to get a clear picture of what happened when the Pueblo was seized and what occurred during the crewmen's captivity.

The intelligence ship was seized last Jan. 23 by North Koreans who charged it was spying inside their territorial waters. The United States denied this.

going away at a critical period but his aides said they were carrying out his orders and they were in contact with him at all times.

Up to the weekend, the shivering and suffering New Yorkers without heat were getting little comfort from the weather. One report said the temperatures would be going up to the 40's.

But they had been ranging from 6 degrees into the 40's and there was some snow to make matters worse.

Because of the suffering, illnesses and potential health damage, health officials rated the fuel crises in New York worse than the recent garbage strike in the city.

All year New York has been plagued with strike after strike, including teachers and hospital workers. Policemen and firemen also had shortlived protests.

Donald Heath, who has moved to Akron, Ohio, and the four others under investigation appeared before a federal grand jury in Cleveland Dec. 18, one month after the purported assassinations were supposed to have taken place.

a coherent description of what happened.

A neighbor, Mrs. Mary A. Jones, turned in the first alarm at 10:43 a.m. She said the blaze started around the Christmas tree on the first floor.

By the time nine city fire units arrived, the whole house was in flames.

Firemen searching through the gutted interior found the remains of Christmas presents, including a charred pair of roller skates.

Police said several neighbors tried to enter the burning home to rescue those inside but were driven back by the flames. Some had to be restrained by firemen from trying to go inside.

and the Cuban government, passionless parties to a trial of tense emotions and human selfishness, hold the key to conditions of happiness.

Someone must lose.

Mrs. Washington had hoped her daughter would be home for Christmas, but now she hopes simply that she will be sent back soon.

She has a great concern for Jennifer's health, because she hasn't been vaccinated (for smallpox) because of an allergy condition.

Mrs. Washington took her to the doctor often for the allergy and is afraid that in Cuba there will be few doctors and maybe a lot of smallpox.

The worried mother denied the stories in the newspapers which said that Jennifer said she was choked by her mother.

She said her daughter never even got spanked.

Mrs. Washington and her husband separated last March while living in Gary, Ind.

She took her daughter with her, returning to live with her mother.

Washington graduated from Bethune-Cookman College, in Florida, with a major in biology and a minor in chemistry.

Both he and his wife are native Philadelphians.

Black buying power seen increasing here

A report on the profile and buying power of the black family in Baltimore shows that the brown community is a major business force with 3683 million to spend in the city by next year.

"The "Negro Market Data Handbook", compiled by the Chamber of Commerce of Metropolitan Baltimore says that family income will rise from an average of $5,700 to $7,900 by 1975.

The 79-page report by the predominantly white Chamber of Commerce predicts that the city's black population will reach a total of 450,000 in the next 15 years.

The report was published last month in an effort to "provide the information so badly needed" in gauging black buying power.

"In 1950, one American in ten was black, by 1980 the ratio will be one in eight," the handbook states.

Pointing to " a marked increase in the number of black families in higher income brackets," the marketing book states that median income has gained a 60 per cent increase to $4,939 over the past eight years.

"Yet even with this improvement income of the average black household is only 59 per cent of the white median."

In the past six years an 11 per cent increase in black families earning more that $7,000 has been recorded, according to the report.

Employment patterns have changed drastically in the last seven years among the black community, it says;

There has been a substantial drop in employment categories such as household workers, laborers, and farm workers.

There has been a dramatic jump in black employment as clerks, craftsmen, and professional or technical personnel the study reveals.

Baltimore ranks fifth among the major cities in America in black buying income per household at $5,836, according to the survey.

The report marks two areas in the city for highest population expansion in the next decade. These areas are "Howard Forest—Windsor-Hill" and "Cold Spring — York Road—Alameda."

"Over the 17 years since 1950, black home ownership has increased sharply, and by 1967 an estimated 40 per cent of all house-holds in Baltimore City owned their homes," the handbook states.

In its examination of black employment statistics the handbook says "the two Inner City market concentrations analyzed in this report contain 45 per cent of city population, but two thirds of its unemployment."

In what it calls "a profile of the average black household in Baltimore City," the handbook says that the "average" family is "young, with two children, probably owns its home, earns over $500 a month before taxes, spends almost its entire income; Does about 63 per cent of its spending in retail stores, owns a car, television, dishwasher, and will undoubtedly buy one or more major appliances in the next year or two" and "votes Democratic.

"Black-owned businesses are hot yet a major factor in the business economy of Metropolitan Baltimore" despite the fact that the area has double the percentage of black-owned businesses that is estimated as the national average.

If anything, this lack of black-owned business is the major factor lacking in creating a dynamic and self-supporting economic community.

The report makes it clear that the minority consumer is an ejiconomic factor to be reckoned with by any businessman.

New student program aids rehabilitation

Mentally retarded students, students with other mental and emotional disorders, and students with diabetes, epilepsy, orthopedic handicaps, and speech and hearing impairments are among 6,853 students taking part in a new education-vocational rehabilitation program in twelve Maryland school systems.

Students are receiving a variety of services, including evaluation, counseling, restorative services and vocational training.

The State Department of Education has just reported to each school superintendent in the twelve systems — Anne Arundel, Baltimore City, Baltimore, Cecil, Charles, Dorchester, Frederick, Harford, Montgomery, Prince George, Washington and Wicomico Counties — the results of the first full years operation of the cooperative program.

The reports show a total of 722 students rehabilitated, with Baltimore City showing the greatest number of clients, 1,739, as well as rehabilitations, 209.

Other systems with heaviest caseloads are Baltimore County 1,248, Prince Georges County, 1,116 and Montgomery County 1,011. State officials hope to inaugurate the cooperative programs in all counties by 1972.

A total of 31 State Department of Education rehabilitation counselors are assigned to the program which completed its first full year of operation in fiscal 1968. Expenditures for case services were $712,733.
