By ELOISE RICHARDSON

ANNAPOLIS, Md. — Douglas S. King, retired veteran educator and churchman, who served in the public schools of Anne Arundel County for over 25 years, died Tuesday at the Anne Arundel General Hospital after an extended illness.

Funeral services will be held on Saturday morning at 10 o'clock at the Asbury United Methodist Church on West St. here.

A native of New Haven, Conn., Mr. King was the only child of scholarly parents, the Rev. James U. and Anna King. Much of his childhood was spent in Wilmington, Del.

Also during his early life he was exposed to the intellectual environments of the ministerium, Yale University, the classics, Latin and Greek, in preparation for a career in the ministry.

After graduation, he began a teaching career which spanned 40 years.

He taught nine years in Delaware, and more than 30 years in Maryland.

He earned his M.S. degree from the University of Pennsylvania in 1942.

Ill health forced him to discontinue his doctoral studies within a few credits of completion.

Before moving to Annapolis he had served as principal of the Westminster High School at Westminster, Md., as principal of the Frederick Street High School at Cumberland, Md., the St. Claiborne School at Cambridge, the Phyllis Wheatley School at Bridgeville, Del., the Louis Redding School at Middletown, Del., and the Lockerman High School at Denton, Md.

During an interim of principalships, he also served as a supervisor of elementary schools in Kent County, Md.

In 1941 Mr. King began his career in Anne Arundel County, where he served as principal of Bates High School over 15 years. At the time of his retirement he was supervisor of instruction.

Other experiences in Education include five years of service on the Morgan State College Summer School faculty and membership and/or chairmanship of several educational evaluating committees of the Middle State Association of Secondary Schools and Colleges. At one time he served as a guest lecturer for the Schoolmen's Week program at the University of Pennsylvania.

Mr. King was a churchman, who distinguished himself in all the communities where he lived. He served on the local church boards as well as on district conference commissions.

He was a trustee of the Asbury Church for a number of years before he retired because of ill health. He also was on the Commission on Christian Social Concerns.

Mr. King had been prominent in the civic life of Annapolis as an active member of the Citizens Planning and Housing Committee, the executive board of the Anne Arundel General Hospital Advisory Board; to the 60's and representing both races and all social classes, simply came to pay their respects to a man who had given his life for them.

Many of the participants mentioned that they had not known there was to be a vigil in honor of Rev. King until they saw the crowds in front of the Federal Building, carrying placards inscribed with his name in black letters, and voicing the demand for a holiday on Jan. 15.

Among the groups represented in the march were the Black Student Union, the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC), the Black Panther Party, the Peace and Freedom Party of Maryland, and Local 112 of the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees.

The action included the circulation of a petition asking the eight Congressmen and both Senators from Maryland to support a nation-wide movemt to give the day legal status as a holiday.

A bill to this effect has been introduced in the new Congress by Rep. John Conyers (D., Mich.)

This petition has already accumulated slightly over a thousand signatures in Baltimore alone over the past week, organizers of the drive report.

Among the signers have been several prominent black leaders, including Parren Mitchell, Mrs. Juanita Jackson Mitchell, Walter Lively, Samuel Daniels and Mrs. Madeline Murphy.

In Atlanta, Ga., Mrs. Martin Luther King announced Wednesday that plans are now being formulated to construct a $15 million Institute of Afro-American Studies in that city.

Fund-raising activities for the proposed institute, which will be named in honor of her late husband, are expected to start soon.

Asked why he felt the day should be a holiday, City College student Cornel Wilson, 17, replied:

"If George Washington's Birthday is celebrated as a special occasion because Washington was one of the country's great leaders, then why shouldn't Martin Luther King's birthday be celebrated for the same reason?

"George Washington is black people in particular, not really that special to even though we celebrate the day. But Martin Luther King was one of our own. He was our greatest countryman."

Michael McCain, a CAA employee and member of Local 112, AFSCME, was asked why he and other white person felt it their duty to participate in the vigil.

"The Rev. King was assassinated for a reason," he replied. "The people who rule this country know that we whites have to be taught to separate ourselves from blacks and keep a wall between us, if they are to maintain their power.

"Dr. King overstepped the bounds in trying to build an alliance between poor whites and blacks and other oppressed minorities. It was in trying to bring us together that he lost his life, and we remember that."

On the state level, former Gov. Spiro T. Agnew has already proclaimed Jan. 15 "Human Rights Day" in Maryland.

Acting earlier this month at the request of the Maryland State Teachers Association, the Vice President-elect issued an appeal to all school systems and professional organizations to plan activities on this date that would "promote intercacial harmony."

Eulogy: Ulysses G. Lee

(The following is the eulogy given by Dr. Sterling Brown, Howard University professor of English, at the Saturday funeral for Dr. Ulysses G. Lee.)

In his less than three-score years, he achieved so much. Ulysses Grant Lee was scholar, author, literary critic, historian, editor, and educator; to all of these callings, he brought strenuous dedication, the first talents and the highest ideals of performance.

His other interests ran broad and deep, pursued with the same unflagging zeal and the same standards of excellence.

For his family, there were seven children, four sisters, and two brothers. He was the admired, dependable, eldest son and brother.

For his wife, Vivian, he was the beloved, stimulating, resourceful husband; for so many, he was the highly respected friend.

His life was lived to the full. "For his wife, his family, his friends and his students, that life was richly rewarding.

Ulysses Lee was endowed with a searching and retentive mind. He knew an amazing amount about various subjects; his accuracy was sure; his memory, unfailing.

But his storehouse was filled not for pedantic showing off; he wanted to know; he wanted to know correctly; he wanted the truth.

His doctorate from the University of Chicago was in the History of Culture, and his major fields were American Literature and History. But he was also a close student of many areas of English and world literature and history.

He was an impassioned lover of music; here too, his tastes ranged wide. His vast collection of records starting with the old 78's to present long-plays, contains the best of folk music, jazz and classical music. His musical taste was discriminating; his musical response was deeply felt.

In other areas, his curiosity and information were startling: On such subjects as unknown Americana, colonial iron works, railroads, the growing of roses, the history of cats from the time of the Pharaohs to the latest cat shows, he would produce, with ease, recondite and accurate details.

His scholarly honors are too numerous for listing.

At Dunbar High School he was outstanding; he graduated from Howard University Summa cum laude and was elected to Phi Beta Kappa.

At the University of Chicago, he won several fellowships in the Humanities. For his instructors, he was a challenge and a joy.

He was a great teacher. At Morgan State College, in 1963 he received the distinguished teacher award.

His thorough preparation, his provocative classroom techniques, his own obvious desire to learn and respect for learning brought from his students affection and confidence.

He never played up, however, to a student audience, and one of his best friends has stated that when one of his classes at the University of Pennsylvania gave him an ovation, he received it with surprise and embarrassment.

His modesty was as great as his ambition and determination.

For nearly 30 years, he was a teacher — at Lincoln University, Pa., Lincoln University, Mo., at Morgan State College for his longest service as professor of English, and as visiting lecturer at the University of Pennsylvania, where he was recently appointed as Professor of American Civilization.

He was in great demand as a lecturer. In 1965, he participated in seminars of the American Society of African Culture held in Sierra Leone, and appeared on radio and television in other parts of West Africa.

Though a conscientious and diligent teacher, he found time for much editorial work.

His contributions to the editing, and his articles and reviews were of great value to the CLA Journal. (College Language Association) and the "Journal of Negro History" of which he was Editor-designate.

He served on the editorial staff of the Federal Writers' Project, and was most helpful in two of their important publications, "Washington, City and Capital" and "The Negro in Virginia."

He was also, recently, an editor with the Arno Press of New York, bringing out a series of reprints of important works of Negro history and literature.

Ulysses Lee was one of the editors of "The Negro Caravan," a pioneering anthology of writings by American Negroes.

In all of these editorial tasks, his precision, learning and imagination were of inestimable value.

Besides articles and reviews Ulysses Lee was author of "The Employment of Negro Troops in World War II," a volume in the official series on the history of the United States Armed Forces.

This authoritative work has been justly praised for the solidity of its research, its scholarly objectivity, and the importance of its findings.

His scholarly achievements thus ranged wide; went deep.

So did his personal concerns.

He was a man of sincere religious conviction.

He was a man whose enjoyment of life was intense.

His band of friends is a large one.

They remember his zest for learning; for exchange of ideas, for frequent but unheated debate.

They remember his modesty; his generosity, his courteous manners, his respect for and treatment of elder persons; his warmth and loyalty and integrity.

His life was a full one.

We remaining — his wife, his family, his friends, his colleagues, his students — are richly rewarded in having known him.

Union wage scale up for truck drivers

Union wage scales for motortruck drivers and helpers rose 5.2 percent during the year ending July 1, 1968, according to the Labor Department's Bureau of Labor Statistics.

"This gain, representing a 19 cents-per-hour increase in the average, brought the Bureau's index of these scales to 152.4 (1957-59 =100). The 1967-68 annual advance was less than the 5.9 percent increase in 1966-67, but higher than any other year since 1957-58.

The annual survey, covering union motortruck drivers and helpers in cities of 100,000 population or more, showed that drivers averaged $3.78 an hour in July 1, 1968. Helpers, who are not found in all segments of the local motortruck industry, averaged $3.36.

During the year, nearly all workers covered by the survey received upward scale adjustments.

However, the high point of the trial came when David Harris, a local attorney, testified from the witness stand he overheard a conversation between police officers in the hallway at a police station.

The lawyer told the court the policemen insisted on parading the suspect before a witness despite the fact that the suspect told them his lawyer was no present.

Mr. Harris testified he knew Mr. Kandel was not present and informed the police he felt they were depriving the defendant of his rights by not waiting until he arrived.

The police officers involved testified they placed Wallace in the courtroom among spectators and then brought in the filling station attendant to point him out.

During the trial Mr. Kandel told the court the incident was "the most flagrant violation of the 6th Amendment" he had ever witnessed.

Asking that charges be dismissed against his client, he stated, "The police disregarded my client's request. He exerted his privilege for a lawyer. His absolute rights were violated. He did not have a preliminary trial and his case was taken right to the grand jury."

ILL — James A. B. Callis, well-known retired teacher, church worker and YMCA layman, is reported critical in Gilf ill in Provident Hospital. He is 83.
