Mental health services planned for hospitals

Dr. Addison W. Pope, regional Mental Health director for Baltimore City, has announced plans for the expansion of community mental health services at several general hospitals and the addition of new centers at others.

Community mental health is defined as early treatment of the mentally ill within their home communities.

At a press conference Tuesday, Dr. Pope pointed out that many persons in such circumstances today in Baltimore are unable to afford a private psychiatrist for consultation, much less for prolonged treatment.

"The few public and private psychiatric clinics are already understaffed and overburdened, and may be a discouraging distance from the troubled person's home," Dr. Pope said.

As early as 1963, the late John F. Kennedy called for a "bold new approach" of community health centers, he said.

He further stated, "Federal funds were granted to each state to plan a comprehensive state-wide program."

The Maryland Comprehensive Plan, which heavily stressed the need for community programming, designated four general hospitals in Baltimore City for the development of readily accessible mental health services. These were Baltimore City Hospitals, Johns Hopkins, Sinai and University.

In 1968, an addendum to the original program was published, adding North Charles General and Provident Hospitals.

Implementation of plans is contingent on state funding.

Provident Auxiliary dance to be followed by dinner party

The Provident Hospital Auxiliary, which hosted a top social affair, Friday evening, was back on the planning line, this week, with a Hat Party and dinner in the making.

The latter event, scheduled for Feb. 15, will be given by the Building Fund Committee, and will be held in the Hospital Annex.

* * *

The gala formal dance, the fourth annual one, and also a benefit which helps support several Auxiliary sponsored activities, took place at Eastwind, with Sherman Lewis providing the music for dancing.

A high-dress affair, the scene was one of subdued elegance and ultra fashion.

* * *

Slim black velvet gowns with touches of blazing brilliants was selected by many, among them Pinnie Ross, chairman of the affair, Renee Clay, Carmenlitta Hackett and Vera Macer.

One of the prettiest gowns seen anywhere this season was the Renaissance gown chosen by Ella Stovall in glittering brocade of black, gold and silver with its empire bodice rising to meet low decolletage, narrow long sleeves and wide, gathered stand away skirt.

Reflecting the Grecian era look was Gloria Bassfield's supple one shoulder-dered gown in black crepe and Betty Mason's in Periwinkle blue. Fur accented two memorable gowns — Maxine Thomas' in dark frosted blue, the scooped neckline outlined with mink and Harriett Williams' strapless gown with the entire bodice in black fox over a gently gathered skirt of rose colored brocade.

* * *

A column of clear, cornflower blue in slip down, its bodice sparked by a single rhinestone pin was Cell Banton's choice. Louise Tildon and Cavelia Pinkney who shared the same table were studies in contrast — Louise's maroon emerald green gown accented with radiant beading at the neck and brief sleeves; Cecelia wore one of the few silver dresses seen — this brief limited accordian pleats in the body of the dress and in the shepherd's sleeves.

Continuing the salute to originality was Jody Jahlon in intriguing formal pants of white fake fur; the bodice figure following and developing into wide legged pants with gold braided accents at the neck and hem. Delicate splendor was visible in Jannie Morange's floating pink chiffon over crepe, one arm bare, the other caged in chiffon with rhinestone accents at the shoulder.

Rachel Mabrey's stark gown of muted shades of red and green brocade with lattice work closing at the neck echoed the simplicity of her natural hairstyle.

* * *

Demure pink and white was Mary Zollicoffer's choice, the bodice scooped out front and back in rose pink over a candlelight skirt flocked with pink. Pink was also Maggie Watkins; co-chairman of the event, choice. Her "new" look included a knee length crepe tunic of bright pink accented by a side closing white organza ruffles and narrow pants with ruffling at the hem.

Beatrice Avery, president of the auxiliary, chose a two-piece gown of jade green, a short, narrow overblouse over a slim skirt, the fabric of which sported its own jewelled pattern. May green was Willia Bland's selection, with a narrowed square cutyoke, the dress gently gathered and fluid from the yoke; the yoke and hem outlined with sequins.

* * *

Spotted among the male guests were such items of striking interest as tuxedos of bright new blues and greens. Roosevelt Nilson's dark blue brocade jacket was worn with a companion marine blue turtleneck.

Henry J. Whalen, the administrator of the hospital, chose standard black tuxedo, but his shirt, with ruffles cascading down the front and circling the neck, was the last word in garments of this type. Charles Tildon, associate administrator of the hospital, chose an orange ice shirt to complement his dark blue double-breasted jacket.

* * *

In addition to Mrs. Ross and Mrs. Watkins, members of the committee which executed the affair were Mrs. Gertrude Bell, president of the Provident Hospital Catonsville Twig; and Mesdames Rosa Clanton, Joyce Agero, Shirley Quillens, Virgie Mone, Gilda Williams, Vivian Scott and Harriett Williams.
