—Eastern coed

Services Divison which is waiting for the parents to decide which of three other schools she is to reenter.

However, the parents told the AFRO they want their daughter back in Eastern where she is scheduled to graduate next year.

A similar case of indefinite suspension was exposed by the AFRO last month. In that case, a 12-year-old Lemmel Junior High honor student had been suspended indefinitely because of a dispute with another student over a chair in the German class. It was his first disciplinary incident.

He was reinstated in school last week.

That case touched off a request by School Board members, Mrs. Elizabeth Murphy Moss, who asked the school administration to explain its suspension procedure at the open meeting Thursday evening.

A total of 420 pupils have been suspended from the Baltimore Public Schools as of Feb. 28, according to a report submitted to the School Board Thursday night by School Superintendent Thomas D. Sheldon.

In that same report, it was revealed that 789 were suspended in 1967-68 and 546 in 1966-67.

Most of the suspensions were junior high school students, with 360 of this year's total from that group.

She asked Dr. Sheldon for a report on the schiol suspension policy. He passed out a five-page document at the meeting.

The document spelled out the steps taken in the event of a suspension, including a regulation that the parents or guardians must be notified in writing and that the pupil may be reinstated after his case has been studied.

The Division of Special Services determines whether the pupil will be sent back to the same school, a different school or submitted for physical or psychological examinations.

Samuel T. Daniels and Larry S. Gibson, board members, said trey were not satisfied with the report Mr. Gibson was "concerned with what is defined as an indefinite suspension."

He asserted he felt that principals had too much leeway in handing out indefinite suspensions.

Mr. Gibson suggested that Dr. Sheldon's staff determine the average length that pupils are suspended and report back to board at the next meeting.

Mrs. Moss asked Dr. Sheldon to report on the reasons for these suspensions, and a report is expected at the next meeting.

The report showed a high rate of suspensions for some schools and low rates at others.

One school singled out by Mr. Daniels was Lemmel Junior High, with 53 suspensions so fr- this year and a total of 70 last year. "School 106 (Johnson Junior High) operates in a highly deprived area, and has far fewer suspensions," Mr. Daniels noted.

School 106 had 14 last year and none this year.

The highest total last year was 111 in School 22 (Washington Elementary School).

"Some schools have a higher rate of suspenslin than others, I think we should accept the broader challenge of coping with the situation, rather than suspending students indefinitely," Mr. Gibson said.

Dr. Sheldon said he recognized a need to "revise the policies dealing with suspensions. We need additional staff so these things can be cleared up more quickly. There are not enough psychiatrists and counselors."

• • •

Mrs. Marian Banfield, a member of the Mayor's Task Force on Education, presented a dramatic testimony against the indefinite suspension policy.

She referred to recent AFRO articles detailing the suspensions.

"A subcommittee of the task force has been focusing its meetings on dropouts, Mrs. Banfield said. "We believe that every dropout represents the failure of the public schools to engage a child effectively enough to allow him to enjoy the benefits of his right to a good education.

"We are convinced that the Board of School Commissioners needs to insist that there be a revised policy and program for both temporary, or indefinite stupensions.

"The community has no intention of increasing teachers' salaries without teachers becoming more positive in their responsibility to see that our children feel they are being educated in our modern school.

"This nonsense of gym teachers and home ec teachers keeping pupils out of class or failing pupils because the pupil lacks materials will have to end, smoking in the lavatory or cutting a class can be handled other than by suspension."

• • •

She suggested that psycho-educational interim schools for pupils whose behavior make normal school attendance impossible. She said the interim school plan was drawn up five years ago.

Federal funds are available for such a plan, she said. The division of special services should play a major role in the "area if human relationships," she said.

She gave one example of a child that was referred to her who admitted that he acted up in class because he didn't want other children to know he could not read.

• • •

Earlier in the meeting Dr. Sheldon introduced a report advocating allowing counselors more freedom in directing students toward particular schools.

The school system, he said, should be able to set up priority lists based on the counselors' reports. The plan, he said, was proposed in the face of overcrowding in sime schools and underpopulation in others.

The plan met opposition from the School Board, which noted favor for continuing the voluntary selection of schiols. They voted 7-1 to hold his report until the next meeting when he will submit another proposal.

The meeting was attended by 130 prsons.

Inaddition to the board members above attending were Francis Murnaghan, president; Mrs. M. Richmond Farring; James Griffin; Philip Machtij and John Sweeney. Sidney Finley Jr., was not present.

Ellis Douglas Jr., 25, 4600 block Park Heights Ave., lost his bid Monday for a new trial and was sentenced to 10 years imprisonment for the March 14, 1968 robbery of the South Street Branch of the Union Trust Bank.

The 11:30 a.m. holdup netted nearly $4,000. Evidence before Judge Solomon Liss at the trial Feb. 19 failed to show Douglas used a weapon in the robbery.

He was found not guilty of the armed robbery and deadly weapon charges.

Douglas has yet to face other bank robbery indictments and charges of robbery of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Burman of cash and jewels at their Rogers Ave. home in 1966.

Charged along with Douglas is Pedro Findley Crooms, 45, who is alleged to have helped tie up the couple before he and his accomplice ransacked the house. Crooms has been missing more than a year and as yet police state they

• • •

Mr. Fisher was a janitor at Johns Hopkins University. He attended Sollers Point High Schiol in Turner Station, Md. After high school he enlisted in the Marine Corps.

When he wasn't working, Mrs. Fisher said her son spent a lot of time in the public library. "He read a lot, he was always going to the library."

• • •
