Do You Know?

Nearly 4 million high school and college students will be looking for jobs this summer, and those starting late may be among 700,000 the Department of Labor says will not be able to find work. Don't put off—the jobs are there—start applying now.

For students who want to spend their summer abroad, the American Field Service has an overseas program that enables youths 16 to 18 to live with families in foreign lands for about 10 weeks.

There's no charge for staying with the host family, but money for travel and incidental expenses is needed. Financial aid is available, however. Write the American Field Service, 313 E. 43rd St., New York, N.Y., 10017.

• • •

Another summer program for youths interested in science is sponsored by the National Science Foundation and 100 of the nation's leading universities, museums and science laboratories.

Each summer more than 4,000 youths can study or become members of scientific teams working in any one of dozens of interesting fields. Aid is available. Write the National Science Foundation, Washington, D.C., 20550.

The Institute of International Education, 809 United Nations Plaza, New York, N.Y., 10017, publishes a pamphlet that lists study programs for high school and college-age students in Europe, Latin America, Mexico, Canada and the Near and Far East. Price: 50 cents.

For shoppers in the Eastern states—the Department of Agriculture's "best buys" for the month of March are:

Canned tomatoes, and tomato products, pork, grapefruit and canned grapefruit juice, turkey, dried prunes, canned and frozen sweet corn, potatoes, rice and peanuts and peanut products.

Let your dentist know you've heard. The use of antibiotics in pulling teeth in healthy persons is ineffective, the Food and Drug Administration reported last week.

• • •

Where will the opportunities for work be in the next decade? Which occupations will require the most employees? According to the Department of Labor, workers will be in steady demand in these fields:

Private household workers, secretaries, retail salespeople, public school and college teachers, bookkeepers, hospital attendants, truck drivers, engineers, waiters and waitresses, registered professional nurses, typists and cashiers.

Also, science technicians, cooks and chefs, beauticians, office machine operators, practical nurses, manufacturer's salesmen, carpenters, factory assembly-line workers, telephone operators, construction laborers, bank clerks, accountants, welders and auto mechanics.

For details on any field that interests you, consult the "Occupational Outlook Handbook, 1968-69." It's available in most public libraries.

Playing the ponies? A U.S. Court has ruled that winnings at the race track are taxable. Net losses are not deductable, however. But losses, if backed up by records, can be used to offset your winnings.

Two New York banks have just raised their service fees on checking accounts from 50 to 75 cents. This may be a tip-off to rises coming in other cities.

• • •

Inflation has taken the "savings" out of savings accounts. The buying power of a $5,000 savings account today will be reduced to only $2,500 in 25 years if inflation continues at its present rate.

A means to avoid this erosion in your savings is to invest in mutual funds, which have a built-in growth potential. Any broker will explain the details.

An investment worth looking into is tax-exampt state and local government bonds. Since they are tax-free, the interest they pay is actually considerably higher than their official interest rate.

Most people think of "old people" when they hear Social Security mentioned, but this isn't the whole story. Thousands of younger persons are receiving benefits from Social Security, including disabled workers, widows and dependent children.

If you feel you may be entitled to benefits, call or visit your local Social Security office.

Two new booklets. "If You Become Disabled." SSI-29 and "Social Security Benefits," SSI-47, can be obtained free at local offices or by sending 15 cents to the Superintendent of Documents, Washington, D.C., 20402.

S S Volunteers work with neighborhoods

Willard Wright and Charles Gladden, two Social Security Administration employees, have just signed up for a new job.

Its a part-time job really, and the salary is nothing to crow about. As a matter of face, Mr. Wright and Mr. Gladden are likely to spend more than they'll make. They're looking to the kind of satisfaction that only comes from doing an important job well, however.

They are among some 400 social security employees who signed up to participate in a volunteer activities program the agency recently established. They have agreed to work with East Baltimore youths in recreational activities, in conjunction with Poets Athletic Club, to which they belong.

Mr. Wright said youths channeled through the Community Action Agency neighborhood centers would be included in a recreational program now being conducted by the club. The club already has a 72-member basketball league and is planning to develop baseball and football leagues.

"The idea is to give them the same opportunity for development through organized sports that youngsters from more affluent neighborhoods have," Mr. Wright said. "Some of those kids are still playing stick ball in the same alleys I played in when I grew up in East Baltimore," he added.

Commissioner Robert M. Ball said that the volunteer services program was set up because a number of employees had expressed interest in volunteering their services, but were not sure how to go about it. "We're serving as a channel to help bring their services to the places where they can be most useful," he said.

More than 900 employees have indicated an interest in contributing their spare time during a series of meetings held at the Woodlawn building with local groups.

About 40 persons will be devoting weekends to patients at Spring Grove Hospital, and other programs and non-profit institutions will be included as the project develops.

As a beginning, the agency has "adopted" two neighborhood centers, one in East Baltimore, at 125 Colvin St., and another in West Baltimore at 1125 Fulton Ave. Other centers will be included as the program develops.

About 70 employees will be working through the Fulton Ave. center in a tutorial program with grade school children on a one-to-one basis. One employee has agreed to set up karate classes at the center, and another is working with center officials in developing a neighborhood newsletter.

Other employees have volunteered to work with the policy-making boards of the Concentrated Employment Program, the Neighborhood Youth Corps, and CAA's own Volunteer Services program.

Mrs. Jennie Jenkins, director of volunteer services for the Community Action Agency, told a social security audience last week that a degree is not needed "if you really want to help.

"I think you'll be surprised to find that almost any skill you have can be useful in a neighborhood center's program. The most important thing is the desire to help — to give something of yourself, and prove to those less fortunate that somebody cares," she said.

Maj. Harris on national police board

Major William A. Harris, director of the Community Relations Division, has been elected to the board of directors of the National Association of Police-Community Relations Officers, Police Commissioner Donald D. Pomerleau announced today.

Major Harris, along with representatives from 26 police departments from 21 states and D.C., attended a recent conference in St. Louis, Missouri which was convened under the auspices of the National Conference of Christians and Jews.

In making the announcement, Commissioner Pomerleau said that the purpose of the Association is to promote professionalism among those persons engaged in law enforcement by the assimilation and dissemination of information regarding police-community relations programs, practices and related policies."

• • •

Officers in the Association will also formulate policy guidelines reflecting professional standards in police-community relations practices, and will research, develop and evaluate police-community relations techniques.

Besides Major Harris, five other police officials were elected members of the board of directors. They are: Capt. Herbert S. Taylor of Washington; Deputy Chief Samuel W. Nolan of Chicago; Comm. William H. Moore of Pittsburgh; Division Chief Leonard Johnson of Denver, and Sgt. Larry Vardell of the Department of Public Safety, Dade County, Fla.

Capt. Sidney Cates, head of the New Orleans police-community relations unit, was elected president of the new organization.
