—Still A Mystery

Positive Identification of the body was made Wednesday thought fingerprints the Washington FBI had on file from Mrs. Parker's former employment at the Baltimore Post Office.

The report issued late Wednesday by the local police department indicated that the autopsy so far does not disclose any evidence of foul play.

However, Dr. Ronald Kornblum, assistant medical examiner, states that the autopsy has been marked "pending" and no cause of death has yet been established.

He told the AFRO, "It may be a week before everything is done. We are making microscopic slides and chemical studies of the blood.

"I signed the death certificate but the cause of death is left open and is marked "pending."

The body was released to the Arrington Phillips Funeral Home early Thursday morning.

Mrs. Parker was born in Baltimore, Jan. 30, 1934, the only daughter of Mrs. Theresa Widgeon Austin of New Yprk and Baltimore and retired contractor Cecil Widgeon of Baltimore.

She was twice divorced and is the mother of two sons, agee nine and 14. At the time her mother reported her missing, she was employed at the Sphynx Club as bookkeeper and bar maid and was a former Urban League secretary.

Mrs. Austin, the mother, became alarmed a week after Missing Persons Bureau in Baltimore had found no trace of her daughter who lived in their family home in the 1700 block W. Fayette St.

A longtime friend of the family, Mrs. Catherine Mueller, suggested that the AFRO be contacted to aid in the search and the series of exclusive articles was the result.

The stories unfolded the investigation which was developed with the aid of the young matron's family, her friends, the police department search and news tips from AFRO readers.

During the Police Department probe, Arnos West, a close friend of the deceased woman, gave a statement in which he said he encouraged Mrs. Parker to return to his car after she had tried to go into the water of the huge reservoir at the entrance to Druid Hill Park.

He told police that he and Mrs. Parker had previously visited a bar and friends that night, April 23. He also related to the police that Mrs. Parker seemed angered about some matter and that he took her for a drive to cool off.

After she got out of the car on Cloverdale Rd. near the park and started walking, he told the police he became worried and followed her and later spotted her climbing over the 15-foot high iron railing around the lake.

He said he handed her purse to her after she was persuaded not to enter the lake, he stated, and then drove her home.

Mrs. Austin, her mother, told police her daughter never arrived home that night.

Later, the same week, according to West's statement to the police, he happened to spot Mrs. Parker's pocketbook back on the Lake fence.

In her report to the police, the deceased matron's mother said her daughter never seemed to be the type who would want to take her own life.

The mother said Shirley and son David had resided with her for some time and Shirley had never left over long period of time without calling home or inquiring about the youngster.

The Police Department Marine Division stated that a body in the lake would rise within a week, however, on May 23, at the insistence of the AFRO, Lt. Watkins was able to get the lake dragged. Results were negative.

On Monday, electricians inspecting the lights in the bowl atop the fountain discovered the body in about two feet of water. Police stated the badly decomposed corps was lying across a light.

While hundreds of persons lined the lake shore watching, the body was brought down from the tower by way of the metal ladder and placed in the Marine Department boat.

The ladder extends from the water to the top of the fountain.

Mrs. Parker attened school in Baltimore but left Douglass High School in 1952 when her mother moved to Pittsburgh, Pa.

Mrs. Parker was graduated from Clareton High School in Pittsburgh and took further courses and business education here at Baltimore Junior College.

She was at first married to Richard Price Sr. whom she met in Pittsburgh at Clareton High. Their son, Richard Jr., 14, resides with his father in Pennsylvania.

Following their divorce in 1956, she was married to Baltimore disc Jockey Joseph Parker. Their son is David Parker, age 9.

When Mr. Parker was employed by the Post Office the family resided in Los Angeles, Calif. but later returned to Baltimore.

In addition to her parents and children, Mrs. Parker is survived by a maternal aunt, Mrs. Janie Lawrence of Sulphur, Va.; two uncles, William and Delaware Woodson; seven paternal aunts; a paternal grandmother, Mrs. Sarah Widgeon of Eastville, Va. and many other relatives.

GRIEVING PARENTS—Mrs. Theresa Austin, New York, and divorced husband, Cecil Widgeon, 1110 Argyle Ave., Baltimore, are mother and father of Mrs. Shirley Widgeon Parker. Mrs. Austin is head housekeeper for a Catskill Mountain resort hotel. Mr. Widgeon is a retired contractor. When separate photos were taken Tuesday, the day after their only daughter was found dead, each was silent and stunned with disbelief.

Theories on Shirley

the ladder. The AFRO said she was an expert swimmer.

"But I say she couldn't have. I saw the body. She had on boots. She was fully clothed and had on a coat that looked heavy.

"Using common sense, you can figure it out. How did she get from the shoreline to the deepest part? It's plain to reason."

Leon Clayton, a public PERFECT CRIME?

Leon Clayton, a public school electrician reports he thinks someone "studied it through and then plotted "the perfect crime."

He says he believes it was expected that the water constantly spraying over a lifeless form would completely dissolve it and no trace would ever be found.

He states, "The unusual and outlandish circumstances point directly to this theory and just letting my mind go like everybody is doing, I think although the plan did not work out completely, it may be successful."

A jurist at the Courthouse said years of experience in pondering as he says "the games people play," reports he feels it is "simply impossible" that the lady could have gone to the top of the fountain under her own power."

He said further, "By process of elimination we come to the point on "how else could the body have ended up atop the fountain where the water was rushing up and down?"

"I would say the either unconscious or lifeless form was carried up there."

An assistant state's attorney who claims he has "never heard of such" applied deduction and came up with a theory that involves "a strong person and an excellent swimmer who must have been mighty angry."

He remarked "unofficially and only as a reader," "I would even go so far as to suppose that the person who transported the inert body through the water and up the ladder had an accomplice."

A "courthouse regular who has been a spectator for 25 years inserted his opinion readily to say, "No one would ever swim around in a cold lake fully clothed.

"No one would go up that ladder into the fountain. That water going up high in the air, making a roaring, frightening noise the closer you get, would make your hair stand up.

"If you had suicide in mind, you couldn't do it. You'd sober right up.

"That lady doesn't look like that type. She didn't do it herself. And whoever placed her up there was filled with hatred and fear. They though she'd never be found."

Intendent of all construction

George L. Nickel, superat Druid Hill Park, told the AFRO that suction pipes are too narrow for a body to go up into the founting along with the spurting water.

He added, "anyway, a person who would go up in the pumps would come out like a meat grinder."

SCREENED

Further, he stated the pipes which are connected to pumps which force the water through various systems of the spray, are screened.

He added, "Anything could have happened. People swim around in the lake at night. They sneak in and do it as we have known for years.

"The general opinion here at the plant is that she might have taken a swim around and got tired and climbed up for a rest. Maybe she couldn't make it back, who knows?"

Asked had he ever heard of anyone going into the basin at the top of the fountain, Mr. Nickel replied, "No, I haven't. But we don't watch it all night and like I say, anything can happen."

Joseph Jennings, proprietor of Joe's Carryout at Druid Hill and North Aves. has for many years thought out his own solutions to problems along with his wife, Mrs. Ethel Jennings, a "courthouse regular" for 19 years.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Jennings said the water is too deep for anyone to walk to the ladder and they point out that the water never gets so high as to deposite a person atop the fountain 35 feet in the air.

NOT BY HERSELF

Mrs. Jennings stated, "She couldn't climb up there with the water running. She couldn't get there by herself. No one would want to die that way. God forgive me if I'm wrong, but it all points to something you don't want to think about."

Mr. Jennings, who says he is a "pretty good thinker," inserted, "dead or unconscious, the lady would have been easy to pull along through the water and up to the fountain.

"Somebody put her up there to hide her. They figured no one would find her, and, they dern near didn't.

"If the AFRO hadn't kept the story moving, no one would have paid as much attention.

"Now I see cars slowing up there and everybody studying the situation out.

"But the part that stops me is how anyone could have done all this without somebody seeing. Somebody must have seen with cars passing by the hundreds all hours, day and night."

IMPOSSIBLE

A jazz festival promoter told the AFRO he was one of many Baltimoreans he knows of who have driven by the lake purposely to try to vision how the young

A minister's wife who claims she saw a boat out on the lake one night this spring states, "That open lake beakons and draws a person.

"I'm surprised more bodies aren't found. Maybe they are there and they haven't been careful to drag as they did this time. Maybe it was too top of the fountain.

He states, "It's humanly impossible to do with heavy winter clothing on like she had.

"But, once a body is filled with water it is lighter. The body was not alive when it was put in the water, you can reason that out.

"If she had been alive, she could have dived off and got to shore. Two live people could hardly have gone up the ladder together. One of them was not living."

A junior high school pupil who said he and a bunch of classmates went to the lake Tuesday after school, claims when he was in grade school the teacher told the students there was a way to go up in the tower.

He said the tower at that time had no running fountain.

He remarked, "The tower always did look spooky and mysterious. How many more bodies are there we don't know about."

man's home.

The young former reserve GI was stationed at Fort Meade where, according to the Public Relations office, he "was assigned active duty because he failed to attend the required monthly Reservist drills."

A spokesman for the Army also told the AFRO: "He was sent here from Ft. Stewart, Ga. on April 8. His rating is Spec/4 and though he was still in the in-processing stage his records shows that he was a personnel clerk."

Army reports also reveal that Pvt. Frazier had been sent to Ft. Stewart from Ft. Bragg, N.C. and had requested that he be assigned to a unit near Baltimore before coming to Ft. Meade.

The murdered girl who was reported missing three weeks before she was found lying beneath some brush with four bullet holes in her body, was last seen leaving a party at 2 a.m. on the morning of her death.

Police reports show that she had been committed to Montrose School for Girls and had just been released in February of this year.

Warrants for the arrest of three other men have been issued in connection with the murder.

Police are investigating reports that the dead girl dated all of the suspects, and there was an argument over her affections.

Senator Verda Welcome was in Cleveland, Ohio, last week, for the graduation of her "baby brother," Dave Freeman, who received the degree of Doctor of Podiatric Medicine from Ohio College. Dr. and Mrs. Freeman and their son are residents of Detroit, Mich.

The commencement in Cleveland was a sort of reunion for the Freeman family. Staying home was daughter, Mary Sue Welcome, who had joined a group preparing for Bar Examinations on July 7th and 8th. Miss Welcome will receive a law degree from the University of Maryland, Friday.

But even at a family reunion the Senator could not refrain from politicing. She had a conference with Mayor Carl Stokes on Saturday . . . and is bemoaning the defeat of Mr. Bradley in California. She was, however, back in Baltimore, Monday, for Morgan commencement activities.
