Pictures on Pen hospital walls a cultural effort

"I thought it would be a culture benefit to the inmates even though a lot of people don't think pictures should hang on penitentiary walls."

This is why Miss Concetta Culliver, Supervisor of clerks at the Maryland Penitentiary Hospital borrowed 15 paintings from the Baltimore Museum of Art.

Supervisor since April, Miss Culliver has had the paintings three months and hopes to keep them another three months. Most of them line the walls of the second floor of the three-story building.

* * *

This is the first time that any type of art work has adorned the usually bleak penitentiary walls.

"Your coming into a new position and taking on this unusual and challenging assignment almost simultaneously speaks of administrative and diplomatic persuasiveness," said Dr. Henry W. D. Holljes, chief physician, in a letter of commendation to Miss Culliver.

Miss Culliver admits that she had a little trouble in securing the paintings, but "I was glad to have the support of Dr. Holljes," she said.

"He's interested in culture too, and he backed me up in my efforts to get the pictures," she added.

* * *

Miss Culliver has also contacted other museums and art groups in hopes that they, too, will lend paintings to the hospital.

A veteran of the Marine Corps, Miss Culliver is a graduate of Indiana Hg School (Indiana, Pa.) and the Los Angeles Metropolitan College of Business.

She came to Baltimore in 1964 and was chief clerk at Coppin State College from 1965 to 1969.

Miss Culliver lives in the 5500 block of Fern Park Ave. with her three children Kevin, 13; Cleveland, 12; and Clevel, 6.

FAMILY OF THE WEEK
Virginia and Alfred Tolson

FAMILY OF THE WEEK:

July 4th barbeque turns into wedding

If you happened to pass by the backyard of 1201 Glenwood Ave. on July 4th, you might have seen a setting for a typical Independence Day celebration.

Americans across the nation barbecued in their own backyards or in the back yards of friends or family.

However on Glenwood Ave. at 5 p.m. the barbecue paraphernalia was set up, but most of the laughing, gay picnickers had not yet arrived.

Where were they?

They were inside 1201, the home of Mr. and Mrs. James Tolson (Doris), to witness the marriage of their son, Alfred, to the former Miss Virginia Evans.

The double-ring ceremony was performed by the Rev. Moses Williams, pastor of Zion Methodist Church.

* * *

Given in marriage by the father of the bridegroom, Miss Evans wore a yellow street-length frock.

Mrs. Jeanette Dorsey was matron of honor.

Mr. Tolson had planned for his father to be the best man, but the senior Mr. Tolson had to give the bride away.

To complete the wedding party, the bridegroom selected one of the wedding guests to stand with him.

After the ceremony, the wedding party and their guests changed to picnic closthes and moved out to the backyard where they celebrated the two occasions —the wedding and July 4.

A graduate of Carver High School; Mrs. Tolson is a machine operator for Raleigh Manufacturing Company.

She is the daughter of Mrs. Geneva Bigelow.

* * *

Her hobbies included attending wrestling matches at the Civic Center, but "I've stopped going since I've been married", she told the AFRO.

"My husband doesn't like me to go and I didn't want to give him the night out," she shyly added.

Mr. Tolson is a Douglass High School graduate and has been a transit driver for about ten years.

He does most of the cooking at their Mountwood Ave. home in Edmondson Village and is an avid sports fan.
