Federal panel finds job discrimination at Bethlehem Steel

That the Bethlehem Steel Co. has engaged in discriminatory practices over the years at its Sparrows Point plant was the finding this week of a federal three-man fact finding panel.

The decision of how this situation is to be corrected is now up to James D. Hodgson, Secretary of Labor, said, of:

1. Whether there would be a standardization of teachers' salaries throughout the state;

2. Whether it would be feasible to abolish local school boards and place the operation under the state board;

3. And where to find the $100 to $150 million that would be required to finance such an operation.

He indicated, however, that the incoming General Assembly might find some monetary relief for the political subdivisions this year in the area of public schools cost.

On still another point of interest, the governor promised there would be no new taxes this year.

He will submit Maryland's budget to the General Assembly on Jan. 21.

JANUARY 13

"Black Poetry in the Urban Scene" will be the subject of the week's noon-hour lecture at the central Enoch Pratt Free Library, 400 Cathedral street. Speaking in the Edgar Allan Poe room at 12:30 p.m. today will be Dr. Ruthe T. Sheffey, chairman of the English department at Morgan State College.

Mandel sees some aid to non-public schools

AFRO Bureau

ANNAPOLIS — Gov. Marvin Mandel said here Thursday he favored some state aid to non-public schools, but is awaiting the findings and recommendations of the Krausshaar Commission report before announcing a firm decision.

The governor told newsmen "some form of aid is going to have to be provided."

The Kraushaar report is expected within a few days, and is also expected to urge a degree of state aid to those institutions in dire need of funds.

Gov. Mandel made it clear, however, that a state takeover of public schools presents a more complex problem.

There are questions, he for the panel split on this point.

Floyd H. Bailer, lone black member and a West Coast labor arbitrator, wanted compliance in accord with a proposal by the Office of Federal Contract Compliance, that would have required an overhaul of the plant's seniority system.

The two other panel members, the Rev. Dexter L. Hanley S. J., chairman and president of Scranton University, and Peter Seitz, New York labor arbitrator, were in full agreement on discrimination practices at the plant.

• • •

But they agreed instead in part with Bethlehem officials that changes asked by Mr. Bailer and the federal agency would be unworkable, and urged a softer approach with limited alternatives of the seniority system.

It is a decision on these two recommendations that face the Secretary of Labor.

Some two years ago, the Office of Federal Contract Compliance ordered an end to discriminatory practices at the Sparrows Point plant, but the company appealed a decision of a three-man panel set up by the then Secretary of Labor W. Willard Wirtz.

The present Secretary of Labor's decision must bring compliance, or the company stands to lose about $250 million in federal contracts.

In essence, findings were that the plant's seniority system keeps black workers in menial jobs without foreseeable opportunity for advancement.

Channel 67 announces February '71, College courses on the Air

Again this semester, earn college credits at home!

In cooperation with Catonsville and Essex Community Colleges and the Community College of Baltimore, the Maryland Center for Public Broadcasting is again offering you a unique opportunity to take college courses right in your own home, simply by watching Channel 67 two nights a week, 30-60 minutes a night, for 14 or 15 weeks (depending on the courses you choose).

As a credit candidate, you'll be earning the same credits, doing equivalent assignments and getting the same high level of instruction as on-campus students. The difference is the convenience: You visit your college only to register and buy textbooks, for mid-term and final examinations and for optional counseling sessions.

To follow along at home as a non-credit student, use the coupon below to send for your low-cost student Teleguides, detailed course outlines not requiring visits to the campus or examinations.

Either way — for credit or just to learn something new — you'll want to be part of this new concept in higher education, where the classroom is your living room . . . and Channel 67, a station of the Maryland Center for Public Broadcasting.
