Shorts swing from sports to exotic ensembles for evening

By BRENDA W. ROTZOLL

ROME (UPI) — Shorts, be they sailor, satin, skimpy, swirling or sexy, shaped up as the big fashion news at the Italian spring and summer collections, here, Sunday.

Tiziani showed short shorts with scoop necked tank tops under little jackets, or flared Jamaica lengths, all for sport, and white crepe shorts with for evening.

The designer, whose black organdy and white appliqued flower blouses name was Evan Richards when he was a cowboy in Texas and an opera singer in Italy, showed skirts just below calftop for daytime and almost to the ankle for evening. He stressed dark colors for day and embroidery trim for evening.

Ecru linen evening gowns, slim with a little flare to the skirt, had inset panels of Ecru embroidery or cutwork. Bright gowns with Turquoise tops and orange sheer sleeves boasted yellow linen skirts brightly embroidered with Hungarian floral designs.

The look in dresses was soft and dritty. Tiziani made much use of clinging crepes, or floral print sheers over white taffeta linings.

The Fontana sisters had a sailor-suit inspired collection that ranged from shorts for city wear to an evening gown whose sailor collar was all there was above the waist.

Sporty little shorts suits came in bright yellow with jackets (which never came off) reaching almost to the bottom of the hip, and huge sailor collars in white. Horizontal yellow and white striped shorts peeped out at the bottom and looked trim enough to wear in town as well as at play.

The same suits appeared in pale green silk plaid. For the more conservative woman, there was a pleated button-on skirt, open to the waist. All daytime skirts stopped just below the knee.

Skirts were madly pleated at Fontana, often caught under long slim jackets to give a slim appearance at the waist with fullness at the hem. Polka dots in brown and white were seen again and again.

Evening gowns had very low square or scooped necklines and many had huge puffed sleeves. The most daring gown had a long, gathered skirt of white and plae lavender taffeta plaid. an embroidered huge white organdy sailor collor that came to the waist in a V in front was all the bodice there was to that gown.

Gregoriana and Germana Marucelli both bucked the trend to skirts just below the knee. They perferred slinky skirts which ended near the ankle.

Those designers also favored dark or dull colors with tiny floral prints. A long grey skirt at Gregoriana was slit up the back above the hip and worn over a navy blue leotard.

Marucelli's favorite gown was an evening creation which she did in a dozen color variations. A slim skirt which bared the navel had upholstery trim at the waist. More upholstery trim made up a narrow strapless bandeau bra, and edged a hooded, see-through silk kaftan which fell to the floor.

Hints For Homemakers

It came to me the other day, while talking with my son, that no one takes the time these days to give even simple household tips to men. There should be some sort of informal classes for bachelors in which talented homemakers could enlighten young men—and old ones, too—about everyday housekeeping secrets.

For instance, what does the average man know about doing the laundry? I doubt seriously if he has the slightest idea about the importance of sorting the clothes or selecting the right detergent.

I wonder how many men know the first thing about the work-saving features of CONCENTRATED "all." Many aren't even aware that "all" is a heavy-duty laundry detergent which provides superior cleaning power.

The average man doesn't know about the value of "all's" low suds for washing-machine safety. Nor does he ever figure out why women get so excited about the "all" formula with bleach, borax and brighteners, or about its cleaning power which gets out the toughest ground-in dirt and stains.

He also needs to be told that for best results he must use the proper amount of detergent. It just shows how many household hints there are to be passed on about home laundry.

GOOD MORNING, MRS. BUTTERWORTH'S!

Lately, I have become aware of the fact that there are more men in the kitchen these days. Here's an area where they really can use some tips.

And, since a hearty breakfast is an important part of a man's eating habits, one tip comes immediately to mind.

To make any breakfast tastier, put MRS. BUTTERWORTH'S Syrup on the table. Served on hot cereal, MRS. BUTTERWORTH'S extra-buttery flavor gives a lot of added zest.

And the pancake-waffle lovers will think MRS. BUTTERWORTH'S was made with them in mind. Nothing beats its delicious maple-flavor and fine, golden color. They'll also appreciate its thick-flowing richness.

Of course, our class discussion leader would need to tell the men that breakfast isn't the only time for MRS. BUTTERWORTH'S. If he has a sweet tooth, he can use it as a topping for ice cream or for making baked apples, which is a favorite winter dessert.

Then, when it comes to washing dishes, what does the average man really know about the different dishwashing products available?

You really can't blame him—whether he's a bachelor or a married man—most of today's household advertising is aimed directly at women.

However, even though "soft" hands, mentioned in so many dishwashing advertisements, may not sound very masculine, every man wants his hands to be smooth and in good condition.

So maybe the DOVE LIQUID that thinks it's a hand lotion should fly to the man's dressing room, too!

Men should be informed that DOVE LIQUID not only offers superb dishwashing efficiency but is also lotion mild for hands. With all the cold weather these days, his hands really need all the help they can get—just like ours.

Someone should also tell him that DOVE LIQUID will help give him the kind of hands that women like to feel.

I'll bet that's a tip he'll appreciate more than any other.

LIFEBUOY'S FOR ALL

There's another area where our gentlemen friends might need some helpful suggestions and that is in choosing a bath bar.

Sure, he has one he usually uses and maybe even likes a lot. But when he's told about the good things of LIFEBUOY with mint he's bound to be intrigued.

And when he tries it he'll immediately realize how refreshing and satisfying a shower can really be. He'll also be impressed with LIFEBUOY's effective deodorant protection that won't let him down.

LIFEBUOY'S so good that it makes you feel it was designed especially for you—as well as every other member of the family.

And women are happy with LIFEBUOY because they know how gentle it is to their skin.

Of course, when a family uses LIFEBUOY they do spend a lot of time enjoying their baths, but who cares when the results and pleasure are worth it?

Well, what do you think about my idea for some bachelor education in housekeeping? Seems to me it would help make "living together" a much more pleasant experience.

Army picks 2 officers from Morgan

Two members of Morgan State College's Department of Military Science Staff have been selected to attend the Army's Command and General Staff College in August at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, it was announced last week by Department of the Army.

Lt. Col. Charles J. Birt, an armor officer, and Maj. James R. Crinan, a Military Police Officer, were selected on the basis of their past outstanding performance of duty and their potential for even greater future responsibilities.

When he received the announcement, Col. C. M. Hurtt, Morgan's Professor of Military Science, told the AFRO that in the 22-year history of Army ROTC at Morgan, this is the first time as many as two officers of the staff have been selected for CGSC.

A graduate of the college himself, Col. Hurtt commented that "this honor of these two officers being selected for CGSC does not surprise me after our association these past few years and I am confident they shall complete the course in a most successful manner."

Both ROTC graduates, Lt. Col. Birt and Maj. Crinan will leave Morgan and Baltimore in June.

Postmaster warns on ice hazzard

Postmaster Warren M. Bloomberg again reminds all postal customers of the dangerous threat ice and snow imposes, not only upon the letter carrier, but to all persons exposed to this safety hazard.

"Imagine yourself....feet out from under you....coming down hard on the slippery surface," said the Postmaster, "It can happen, without regard to who the victim may be. Therefore I reemphasize the importance of cleaning your walk, steps and porch, clear of ice and snow. The fall you prevent, may be your own as well as that of the letter carrier."

Postal employees are not required to subject themselves to possible injury in the process of mail delivery.

• • •

Mr. Bloomberg, however, feels confident that residents, because of the excellent rapport with letter carriers and realizing the severity of this hazard, will endeavor to assist them by providing a safe approach to their mail receptacles.

To prevent dents in utensils, store them in an easy-to-reach place so they can be removed without moving others. Make racks for storage of pots, lids, pie pans, thin baking sheets.
