Nigerian students at CCB find Baltimore 'friendly'

By Dr. SIDNEY KOBRE

A Nigerian, George Okon is studying in the pre-medical program at the Community College of Baltimore. He is looking forward to a career as a physician either in the United States, or back in his native land.

He is one of the 6,000 who registered for the day and evening classes at CCB.

Mr. Okon, who is 28, and speak with a British accent, thinks that the standard of living is higher in Baltimore than in Africa, but he says that inflation here causes the real wages to be greatly reduced.

"I find that the American people are friendly and cooperative," he said in an interview for the AFRO-AMERICAN. "They furnish me with information about the city, particularly about places and streets when I am in doubt. You know Baltimore is all new to me."

• • •

Mr. Okon has discovered, too, that the faculty and students at the Community College are friendly and easy to get along with. "I believe that the teachers are really superb at CCB. They are genuinely interested in the students and want to help those who show interest," he explained.

He says that he has taken some interesting and worthwhile courses in the physical and biological sciences as well as in the social sciences, such as sociology.

Asked what he does in his spare time in Baltimore, Mr. Okon replied that he spends most of his time studying. But he does watch some television and visits various neighborhoods of Baltimore to see how people live.

• • •

Mr. Okon is a graduate of the Holy Family College, a High school in Nigeria, and also attended the School of Agriculture there. He worked for the Ministry of Agriculture. But his chief interest, he found, was in medicine.

• • •

He came to the United States about six months ago to visit some friends. He now lives with a friend, James Robinson, of 3916 Fairview Avenue.

"I am looking forward to graduation from the Community College and continuing with my medical education at a four-year institution," he said. "My future plans are still uncertain, as my future decisions will be determined by the opportunities which are presented to me."

Floods Receding

LOURENCO MARQUES, Mozambique (UPI) — Flood waters have subsided slightly in Portuguese East Africa, where thousands have been marooned since last Friday, a Mozambique official said.

Vilar Queiross, Mozambique's secretary for communication, said the waters have receded in the central coastal plain area but he had reports of flood waters from the interior, 200 miles moving down into the central plain.

Agents needed for Civil Service office

The Baltimore Area Office of the U.S. Civil Service Commission announced today that the Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs of the U.S. Department of Justice needs highly qualified young men to serve as Special Agents.

New agents are hired at grades GS-7 ($8,582) and GS-9 ($10,470).

To qualify for these positions you must establish eligibility through the Federal Service Entrance Examination for the GS-7 level and through the Mid-Level examination for the GS-9 level.

Due to the nature of the duties involved, however, Special Agent positions are restricted to males. Since performance of these duties frequently requires personal risks, exposure to all kinds of weather, considerable travel, and arduous exertion, candidates must also pass a rigid physical examination.

For further detailed information contact the Federal Job Information Center, Room B-40, Federal Building, 31 Hopkins Plaza, Baltimore, Md. 21201 (call 962-3206 or 962-3822).
