Crownsville group hears Ogden Nash

CROWNSVILLE, Md. — Ogden Nash, famous poet-humorist, visited Crownsville State Hospital on Thursday and read for more than 150 residents of the hospital. His appearance before the group was in connection with the hospital library program.

From time to time, resource people, particularly in the field of poetry, appear before the residents upon the invitation of the librarian, Mrs. Eloise Richardson, Mrs. Richardson and Mr. Nash met in Portsmouth, N.H. in October when both were guest speakers for the New England Library Association.

Because Mrs. Richardson feels the library must be a motivating force in the rehabilitation of the hospital residents, she established an overall biblio-therapy program, which she conducts weekly.

She is specializing in poetry with the idea that poetry is a powerful therapeutic agent of rehabilitation.

"Poetry is written out of the emotions of those who write it. When it appeals to individuals as they are exposed to it, a sensitivity is created and communication is evoked from these individuals," Mrs. Richardson stated.

• • •

Along with these sessions residents are motivated to write poetry while listening to music using the waltz category. She says that the waltz, classified as a capriice, is a type of composition which is light, gay and of a sparkling character in which joyous and gay rhythmic melody is developed in a free and vivacious manner.

• • •

This kind of music is usually always an assurance of musical appeal through the poetic element of the residents' nature.

Introspection, peace and contentment, understanding a sense of pure beauty, are all in the province of poetic music, and every mood of human beings is expressed.

Many residents, who are prone to write poetry on their own volition, usually give some indication what their problems are all about. This is also true in many instances in the reading sessions," Mrs. Richardson stated.

• • •

Other special guests who heard Mr. Nash included the Poet Laureate of Maryland, Vincent Godfrey Finch, 1970 Poet of the Year and author of the book of poems, Stars and Dust; Jean Sterling, Poet Laureate of the Chesapeake Bay County, and editor-publisher of Scimitar and Song, a poetry publication; Mrs. Lattice McKoy, director of Nursing Service at the hospital, and the Rev. William Barnett, minister of the Unitarian Church of Anne Arundel County, and a former volunteer counselor for the residents of the hospital.
