MUSICAL MOMENTS

Black conductor at Morgan and Lyric

By ADAH K. JENKINS

Occupying the podium as guest conductor of the Baltimore Symphony at the Murphy Auditorium, Morgan State College and at The Lyric, was Henry Lewis.

The Morgan concert on Tuesday evening was sponsored by the Northeast Symphony Society. Offered were: "Le Corsaire" Overture (Berlioz), Piano Concerto in G Major, No. 17, K. 453 (Mozart) with Malcolm Frager, guest pianist and Symphony No. 3 ("Espansiva"—Nielsen).

The program was playea also at the mid-week Wednesday and Thursday concerts at the Lyric.

With expansive gesture and knowledgeable authority the black conductor coordinated his forces in musical style and sensitivity.

He is not theatrical or dramatic, but the orchestra knew what he wanted and produced the same with highly commendable artistry and zealous attention for his concern with details of phrasing and interpretation.

The Berlioz was a richly dramatic tapestry of the French composer's genius with orchestration that was to influence music not only in his time but for years to come.

To the romantic-modern symphony of the Danish composer, there was an exuberant warmth, with delightful lyric passages by the luscious strings and brilliant woodwinds.

The vocalization of the soprano and baritone was especially effective in the pastorale second movement.

Malcolm Frager, Interlude: With the able partnership nationally famous as winner of the Belgium and Leventritt Competitions and as a successful concertist here and abroad, justified his reputation with his scholarly interpretation of the 17th of Mozart's 20 piano concertos.

of the orchestra the work possessed a sparkle and freshness that the composer lent to the classic form.

Maestro Lewis is permanent musical director of the New Jersey Symphony (since 1968). He has made for himself an enviable position in the roster of conductors both in this country and abroad, having conducted the Detroit, Chicago, San Francisco, Buffalo, Boston orchestras and the Royal Philharmonic in London.

His performance of Tchaikovsky's Sixth Symphony was recorded for London Records.

Backstage the conductor chatted about his early interest in conducting, the orchestra during his junior high school days in his native Los Angeles.

At 16 he was the first black member of the Los Angeles Symphony, playing bass violin. He graduated as a music major from University of Southern California.

This year Lewis is conducting the New Jersey Symphony in 100 concerts, after which he will be guest conductor in spring concerts with the Italian Radio and London Philharmonic Orchestras.

Following the concert members of the Northeast Symphony Society met the guest artists at the home of Howard Murphy, treasurer and one of the founders of the Society.

Guests shared with Maestro Lewis the viewing of a television program on which his wife, Marolyn Horne, noted mezzo soprano, was interviewed.

The Morgan College concert was sponsored by the Morgan Faculty Wives, the Baltimore Chapter of Links and Waters AME Senior Choir.

During the intermission refreshments were served by the Music and Arts Committee of the Student Union (Morgan) and Baltimore Alpha Wives.

The Northeast Symphony Society, of which Mrs. Roger (Beryl) Williams is president, closes its season with a concert in April.

Prison environment subject of panel on criminal justice

The Sunday Experience for February 14 will feature Jack McNulty, St. John's Council on Criminal Justice, Earl Maultsby, Prisoner's Aid, and Milton Sturgis, will participate in a panel examining "Rehabilitation and Community Response" at 11 a.m. in Levering Hall, Johns Hopkins University.

Who goes to prison? Prisoners are "failed criminals," says Jack McNulty, acting as a private citizen on the St. John's Council on Criminal Justice, and criminals are "para-professionals" with learned skills, skills that could be put to good use rehabilitating other prisoners, enabling them to develop other skills than the criminal talents that put them behind bars.

The panel on "Rehabilitation and Community Response" will explore the enequities of the prison system and throw further light on the role the community must play in the rehabilitation program, here in Levering Hall at 11 a.m., February 14.

This program is part of an ongoing series. There is no admission. The public is cordially invited to attend.
